"ROMEO AND JULIET"

(Movie Review)

Once again one of Shakespeare's great masterpieces, "Romeo and Juliet," has been introduced to the cinema. The story has been presented with fidelity as to both the language and spirit of Shakespeare. The people have shown their enthusiastic appreciation of his work by their response to the last great picture, "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

"Romeo and Juliet" is played by the splendid actor, Leslie Howard, and the inspiring performer Norma Shearer. The lovers live in Verona and are members of two families between which a feud has been passed down from generation to generation.

They fall in love and marry secretly. Thru an argument between Romeo and Igbolt, Mercutio, a friend of Romeo is killed by Igbolt, who in turn is killed by Romeo. For this crime Romeo is banished by the Prince.

The next day, the parents of Juliet order her to marry Paris, a young nobleman of Verona. Juliet goes to the friar who gives her a sleeping potion to make her appear dead for 24 hours. The friar sends Romeo a message telling him to appear at the Capulet tomb where Juliet is waiting and to take her to safety. Romeo, however, does not receive the message.

When Romeo hears of her death he buys poison and goes to the tomb where he bids Juliet goodbye and kills himself. The friar returns to be with Juliet when she awakens. When she sees her husband dead, she refuses to leave the tomb and stabbing herself falls dead over Romeo's body.

Mercutio is played by John Barrymore, a lovable scamp, cynical and imaginative. Certainly this fine screen interpretation of Shakespeare's immortal tragedy, "Romeo and Juliet," will be well worth your time and money.
