AROUND THE WORLD IN ELEVEN YEARS

By Patience, Richard and John Abbe. Reviewed by Christine K. Simmons. Fredonia State Normal School (Special to Andover News)

What a novelty—a travel book written by children for grown-ups to read. And it did prove the most delightful day's reading I'd had in months. If you want to know what children think, not only of ordinary everyday things, but of life, customs, should read this story of lively doings in five European countries and our own, which the children call simply "America."

"I, Patience" has done most of the writing, but there are portions by her brothers—as of "I, Richard" or "I, John." With their father, internationally famous photographer, and their Irish actress mother, whose dramatic temperament was often pure temper, these rolling stones gathered little of the moss grown in schools but gained a high degree of the sort of polish often called "a liberal education." And their comments on everything, from Patience's birth in a Paris hospital to their mother's habit of parking them while she went places and did things, give the book the special charm of children's thinking.

Can you imagine anything more refreshing than these views? "But if Jeanie is a Jew, then Jews don't look bad at all. Jeanie is very handsome. She has black hair and violet eyes. And she is very polite, and is our best friend." "We do not understand why Hitler hates the Jews, because Jesus was a Jew and the Jews believe in God and say their prayers. Hitler we guess will never get out of that line he is in because he chose to be like a King, and Kings can't ever be anything else. They have to sit on thrones all the time."

"One day in the garden Jeanie told me, Patience, that there was no God in Russia. And I believe it. But some Russians think there is because they pray every day. But I said that there was a God in Berlin and a God in France and a God in Australia and a God in America. And Jeanie said, 'You are right.' "The Russians don't like wars, but we don't understand then why they want to kill the Capitalists. The Capitalists are the people who have lots of money. The teacher said they didn't really want to kill the Capitalists but to take their money away from them and give it to the people. But I don't see how you can take the money away from the Capitalists without killing them."

But Patience overshoots the mark a bit on this, on war and peace. "That's why we don't like wars. All the children suffer then. And while children are ornerly most of the time to their mamas and papas they don't mean to harm people, so people ought not to be going around killing in the wars so that children will suffer."

This sounds as if some parent or teacher had been putting some grown-up ideas over on her! Then, in Part Six, these young foreigners come home to America, where "everything is so nervous," and "the people look angry on the streets, and that's because of depression." Also, "depression is something that depresses you, then you have no job, then you must take money from the President and that makes you bashful."

The trip from New York City to the ranch in Colorado in an explosive second hand car, when they "kept smelling to see if anything was smelling"; the shack they lived in until a blizzard drove them out; luxurious living with friends in Denver; gypsying as a way of life—oh, it is rare reading!

But as gypsies, they "are never bored" and they "don't mind when we have no money nor nothing to eat." And so comes the end—except for the long list of "people we like" (beginning with Fred and Adele Aetaire, Paris, and ending with Alexander Woolcott, Moscow); and the names of "animals we like," including West, rodeo cow, and Whiskey, a dog. But you'll just have to read the book yourself to learn about such things as traffic laws in Paris, school in Germany—"Heil, Hitler!"—Richard and Johnny smuggling Papa's negatives out of Russia "wrapped around their bellies," and modern Russia's "London Bridge" for school children.

Here's how it goes: Capitalism is falling down, Falling down, falling down, Capitalism is falling down, So says Lenin. Communism is going up, Going up, going up, Communism is going up, So says Stalin.

LITTLE BITS OF HUMOR

Willie: "My greatest sin is vanity. Only this morning I looked into the mirror and thought, 'How handsome I am.'"

Saint Peter: "Go in peace. To be mistaken is not a sin."

"I see it says here lion-tamers are very seldom troubled with rheumatism in their old age."

"Ah—and I don't suppose they're much troubled with old age, either."

Wife: "I'm reading a mystery book."

Husband: "Why, that book looks to me like our household book."

Wife: "It is."

Office Boy (nervously): "Please, sir, I think you're wanted on the phone."

Employer: "You think! What's the good of thinking?"

"Well, sir, the voice at the other end said, 'Hello, is that you, you old idiot?'"

"How would you like your eggs served, sir?"

"Is there any difference in the price?"

"None whatever, sir."

"Then serve it on a thick slice of ham."

Sally: "Please, ma'am, I can't find the broom."

Mrs. Shipshape: "Haven't I told you often enough to have a place for everything and everything in its place?"

Sally: "Yes, ma'am, I did that, but I've lost the place."

Hay Prices Vary But Supply Ample

Albany, March 29. Although farmers in some sections of New York State are experiencing a shortage of hay and may be in the market for hay for the next six or seven weeks, supplies in other sections of the State are sufficient to meet all needs, according to the Department of Agriculture and Markets. The Department's Bureau of Markets, which is conducting a clearing house for hay sellers and buyers, has reported prices ranging from $7 to $18 a ton. Names and addresses of persons holding hay for sale, are on file at the Albany office of the Bureau of Markets.

Mid-clover is listed at the Bureau office at $12 to $14 a ton, baled, and $9 to $11, loose. Fodder grass is held at $10 to $11 a ton baled and $7 loose; timothy, $11 to $14 baled, and $8 to $11 loose; alfalfa, $12 to $18, baled, and $10 to $15, loose, all prices being quoted at the farm.
