The Use of Leisure

ANE of the easiest things in the world is to draw up; Urules for the guidance of human conduct. Probably the hardest thing in the world is to induce people to live up to such rules. Theoretically, everybody should! have plenty of leisure time to devote to self-improvement, after his or her day's work is done. Therefore if the working day in which people earn their livings) is cut down to a few hours, the world will speedily become a much better world, because everybody will devote the extra leisure thus gained to the pursuit of, useful knowledge.

man conduct, this theory takes no account of human aren't bothered by laws. Doubtless there are some persons who would! rather use any additional leisure time for study and self-development than to go to the movies or a baseball game. We have heard of such people, but we have? met very few of them.

On the other hand, we have observed that the in dividual who is really bent on self-improvement will; regardless of how many hours he has to work on his;
