Here lies the remains of a radio fan, Also included are chickadees, titmice, nuthatches, flickers and some other woodpeckers, screech owls, Isparrow hawks, and wood ducks. A well-built bird house is durable, rain-proof, cool and readily accessible for cleaning. Wood is the best building material and paint greatly increases the weathering qualities. Modest tones, as brown, gray, or dull green are generally preferred. In general, houses should be fairly low, should not be put up in dense woods, and should be on poles rather than trees. If possible they should be placed with the open-'ing away from prevailing winds. Suggestions for building nestboxes are found in Farmers' Bulletin No. 1456, "Homes for Birds," which is for sale by the Superintendent of
