War History in Review

Vivian Connors has written an unusually good summary of world events during the "great war." Following is the account as she wrote it:

United States Refuses to Join the League of Nations

Whistles blew and people paraded up and down the streets of the cities of the United States as news of the Armistice reached our country on Wednesday, November 11, and the last gun was fired on the battlefield.

Since 1914 this war has been going on in the European countries, but it was not until April of 1917 that the United States entered the war. In 1914 the war began when Francis Ferdinand was assassinated in Sarajevo, Bosnia. The Central Powers—Germany, Russia, Austria, Bulgaria and Turkey fought against the Allies—France, Italy, Great Britain and Japan.

Germany declared that the waters that surrounded Great Britain were in the war zone and warned any neutral country not to let its citizens ride on any English or other belligerent ships. If they did so it was at their own risk.

The Lusitania, a British ship was torpedoed by German submarines on May 7, 1915 in the war zone. Over 1,198 men, women and children lost their lives in this catastrophe among whom were 124 Americans. This did not set so well with the United States and it was seen that the U. S. could not stay neutral much longer. In 1917 our country entered the war on the side of the allies.

In 1918 the war ended and a few weeks later our president, Mr. Wilson, sailed for France to take part in the peace agreement.

Our Senate has expressed that they will not stand with Wilson for the League of Nations. They will not consent to the United States joining it because this would interfere with our traditional policy of isolation because if any trouble started in Europe, our troops would have to go over there.

By this time, the reader will probably assume that someone is just 22 years behind the times. They have assumed wrong because the History C class have been studying about the World War. They find it very interesting but it was not so interesting at the time of the war.

blesome diseases and how they spread, will aid materially in preventing the entry of new infections into the herd. The county committee believes that it is much better to prevent diseases than to cure them after the damage is done. The keynote of this meeting will be prevention rather than cures, as most cattle diseases, such as Bang's disease and mastitis, cannot be cured, veterinarians say.

At these meetings, Professor Bradt will discuss the importance of sound health in its relation to efficient production. The causes of common cattle diseases will be outlined and rules for prevention will be suggested by Dr. Birch. The Federal and State program for Bang's disease control and eradication will be touched upon as will also the progress which is being made with calfhood vaccines for the control of Bang's disease. It is expected that dairy farmers in this county will be very much interested in this meeting which the Farm Bureau has arranged.

Dairy Cattle Health Subject at Farm Bureau Meetings

How to keep dairy herds healthy, free of infectious diseases will be the subject of discussion at a county-wide dairy meeting to be held by the Allegany County Farm Bureau, March 23rd, announced C. Foster, county agricultural agent.

This meeting will be held at the town hall. The speakers will be C. C. Bradt of the Department of Animal Husbandry at the College of Agriculture at Cornell University, and R. R. Birch of the New York State Veterinary College, according to County Agent Foster.

The dairy project committee of the Farm Bureau feels that sound health in the dairy herd is one of the fundamentals in every successful dairy production program.

The herd which is handicapped by poor health and disease cannot be as efficient as a cow or herd that is healthy.

While most herds in the county are healthy, it should be the purpose of their owners to keep them so, Mr. Foster says.

Sound rules of herd management and sanitation based upon a knowledge of the causes of various troubles.
