County Dairymen Study Modern Breeding Methods

School Sponsored by the Farm Bureau Shows Local Dairymen How to Improve Herds.

To make progress in building up their herds, Allegany county dairymen must look for breeding stock backed by production records which indicate ability to transmit high production, according to Raymond Albertsen, authority on breeding from Cornell, who spoke at a cattle breeding school on Tuesday and Wednesday, March 14 and 15.

The school was sponsored by the Farm Bureau—dairy—committee. About 30 dairymen attended each session to learn about the modern methods in this field. They had an opportunity to study the germ cells which carry the hereditary factors for milk production, and to learn how other characteristics, such as horns, color of hair, etc., are transmitted from parent to offspring.

The inheritance of milk and butterfat production were fully explained. It was emphasized that dairymen must look for breeding stock backed by production records which indicate ability to transmit high production if they are to make progress in building up their herds.

The dairymen were shown how it is that a cow may be a high producer herself, and yet not transmit that production to her offspring. "It is only by the continued use of better bulls selected on the basis of what they can transmit to their daughters that the gamble can be taken out of breeding," said Mr. Albertsen.

"It is necessary to follow a system of continuous record keeping in order for a dairyman to know what his cows and his herd sires are transmitting to their offspring. Only by testing all the daughters of a herd sire can his transmitting ability be accurately determined," said the speaker.

New methods of analyzing the breeding performance of herd sires and of brood cows were explained. The dairymen were told that for the first time they now have an opportunity to select their breeding stock on a basis of what their ancestors have transmitted to their offspring. "And that," said Mr. Albertsen, "is the only sound basis for a really constructive breeding program." The very practical problems of selecting herd sires, how to keep them and how to prove them, were all fully explained. A practical method of exchanging bulls in order to reduce the cost of keeping a good bull at the head of the herd, and in order to prove such bulls, was also presented.
