Without someone to help fit garments, here is one way to mark the hemline, provided you consider that large hips or uneven ones may make slight differences: Mark around the largest part hips, and measure from this line to the desired hemline. (To get an even line around your hips fasten a piece of soft chalk to a table top, or to some other hip-high place, then do a "ring-around," or turn-about, thus allowing the chalk to mark the dress you may save time and effort by cutting out several garments at the same time, even the they are to be finished in different ways. Other time-savers and energy-savers are: Stitch all the seams you can at one sitting; trim, fold and baste at another sewing period; make pockets, cufts, collars, and other extra and decorative parts at one time, be-cause skill increases with repetition; keep the parts that require handfinishing in a convenient place to be picked up later, for spare-time mo-
