AROUND OUR HOUSE

PRESERVING FOOD

Preserving food is often an economy when fruits and vegetables are in season. Housewives might well consider, however, the availability of fresh fruits and vegetables during the winter months, for buying them fresh the year round may be a saving, besides assuring fresh products, often superior to those preserved.

When preserving fruits and vegetables, select the method with care. Storing, drying, evaporation, curing and smoking, pickling and salting, and canning all have their good points.

For example: dried corn is delicious, while corn canned without the use of a pressure cooker may spoil. The canning of corn with a pressure cooker is safe, while drying it may be undesirable because so much space and attention, as well as time later for soaking is needed before the food is edible. On the other hand, it is safer to dry than to can over-mature vegetables. Many vegetables can be easily and conveniently stored for many months. Curing and smoking of meat is recommended if a pressure cooker for canning is not available.

Some housewives choose to can many of their fruits and vegetables. Because of their acidity, all fruits and tomatoes are fairly easy to can, and for them only the simplest equipment is needed.

One of the essentials for canning other vegetables and meats is a pressure cooker. Only if they have a pressure cooker may farm housewives safely can meat and chicken during the killing season, for considerable spoilage may result if the meat is canned by the boiling water method.

Full directions for the canning of fruits, vegetables, meat, fish and poultry may be had free by sending a post card to the Office of Publications, Roberts Hall, Ithaca, N. Y.

"Some one throw an axe at you?"
"Nope, got a hair cut."
"Well, sit higher in the chair next time."

Accident

Frances: "Oh, I adore that funny little new step you have acquired. Where did you pick it up?"
Hubby: "Funny step nothing. My suspenders have busted."

LITTLE BITS OF HUMOR

Only a Rumor

A colored boy was taking a stroll thru a cemetery and reading the inscriptions on the tombstones. He came to one which declared: "Not dead, but sleeping."

After contemplating the phrase for a moment, and scratching his head, the boy exclaimed: "He sure ain't foolin' no one body but hisself."

Really Works

An electrician was examining an electric refrigerator that was using too much electricity. He could not find the reason.

He idly asked the cook: "How do you like the refrigerator?"

She answered: "I like it foine. I open the door and it cools off the whole kitchen."

Lazy

A guest of a small Southern state hotel was awakened early one morn-
