

AROUND OUR HOUSE

School Lunch Boxes

A toot of the school bus horn, a dash for the lunch box, a quick goodbye, and many rural youngsters are off to school for the day. They will look forward to the noon-hour with more glee if ample care has been taken in planning and packing their lunch boxes.

A permanent lunch box that can be scrubbed and aired each day makes it possible to have varied foods for lunch, besides preserving the contents of the box in their original appetizing form (which the paper-bag lunch will probably not do).

A lunch box should be large enough to hold some kind of a jar with a tight leak-proof cover for an occasional salad or fruit desert. A thermos bottle for hot soup, cocoa or some other hot dish, is desirable. To keep the flavors of different kinds of sandwiches separate and to keep sandwiches moist and clean, care should be taken to wrap each separately in wax paper. Carrot and celery strips also might well be wrapped in wax paper to preserve their crispness and to prevent their moisture from making other food soggy.

Most boys and girls appreciate a lunch with an occasional "surprise package." This might be a special piece of cake, or cookies or dried fruits, if these have not been used in the sandwich fillings.

On top of the lunch, many mothers place two paper napkins; one to be spread out on the desk to make eating more like a meal at home, and the other to be used as a regular napkin.

DISH FOR THIS WEEK

Fresh lima beans offer a way to vary the family's diet, and to help mothers feed active growing boys and girls. The beans are a good source of iron and of vitamins A, B, and C.

All members of a family seem to be enthusiastic about the following recipe using lima beans, which is suggested by the New York State College of Home Economics:

Scalloped Lima Beans
Put layers of boiled lima beans into a greased baking dish, sprinkling each layer with bread crumbs and salt and pepper to taste. Over several layers pour enough medium-thick white sauce to cover them, then sprinkle buttered bread or cracker crumbs over the top. Bake the beans for 20 minutes in a moderate oven (350 to 400 degrees F.) Other kinds of beans may be prepared in the same way.

A suggested menu is: Meat loaf with broiled tomatoes; scalloped lima beans; buttered swiss chard; whole wheat bread and butter; iced cantaloupe or other fruit; milk for the children; and tea, coffee, or milk for the adults.
