EDUCATE YOUR CHILDREN

Without Increasing Local Taxes

All of the money appropriated by the Legislature for State Aid to public education is returned to local school

State Aid money comes from general taxes such as income tax, stock transfer tax, and sales and excise taxes on tobacco, spirits, automobiles, gasoline, etc.

In any one community, the cost of public educationother than that provided by State Aid—is met by local taxes, chiefly those on real estate.

A cross-section survey of New York State covering more than 300 school districts shows that because of last year's cut in State Aid:

77% of the school districts increased local real estate taxes. Other districts will have to impose increases in 1940. 42% had to cut educational services.

Full State Aid not only equalizes educational epportunities throughout the State but reduces the tax burden on local real estate. Thus, money collected from large wealthy communities helps to pay for education clse-
