Epitaph-Dorothy Parker

The first time I died, I walked my ways;

I followed the file of limpig days, I held me tall with my head flung up But I dared not look on the new moon's cup.

I dared not look on the sweet young rain And between my ribs was a gleam ing pain. The next time I died, they laid me deep,

They spoke warm words to hallow my sleep, They tossed me petals, they wreathed me fern,

They weighted me down - with marble urn.
And here I be warm and here I lie

dry And watch the worms slip by, slip by
