"WHOSOEVER SHALL BELIEVE . . .

In soft, half-mystical light thru stained glass windows, millions of people are gathered the light is clear on others, for bombs are no respecters of beauty or creed . . . and the light falls thru factory windows, on shipyards, where Sunday is another day of work . . . there is particular glory in the light surrounding a mother as she bends over her child's bed . . . Flander's crosses cast long shadows in the early morning sunlight . . . but the same light reveals new life borne in dingy rooms and expensive hospitals, in hovels and mansions.

Out of the blackness of night, comes day-from the depths of despair, comes hope. Many centuries ago a man who understood these things seemingly fell prey to the forces of darkness . . . the light of day nineteen hundred and forty-one years ago showed that he triumphed after all . . . and that things of the spirit do not perish . . . that Easter is a promise.

The Easter lilies will fade and die-but their seeds will live. and grow; a tree in mid-winter seems utterly without life-but the light of Spring brings its Easter; Washington, Lincoln-who can say they're gone? No, you can't see them or speak to them, but they're vividly alive in the hearts and minds of people the world over; and in your family, those who have gone before live on in your memory. Following the meeting the boys
