Still Out of Hitler's War

IN EVERY crisis that confronted our country since its birth there have been two points of view, but, 1, # this being a Republic in which the rule of the majority prevails, a course once decided upon is carried There was a great division of opinion as to the wis-

At any rate, it is not probable that we would—20 years after—be feverishly arming to meet the menace of a conqueror, with the mad notion that the only people worthy of governing French. were his own Germans, and bent on making the world subject accordingly.

Well, here we are again with the two points c view on the most effective method of keeping country out of war. On the one side are the isolation-1. anything that would offend Hitler, and that our defense effort be confined to preparedness within our own boundaries. That is the simple definition of the controversy. It is not necessary to call names, or question motives. It is the will of the nation that must determine, and that will can only be expressed by the President and the majority of Congress. Of course party politics figures in the pending situation, as it figured in the League of Nations and the World Court struggles despite the fact that Theodore Roosevelt was the original League of Nations man. It is not a mere coincidence least. that in practically every important defense measure advanced by the President the bulk of the Republicans in Senate and House fought the measures, while bulk of the Democratic majority voted for them.
