SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

THE MIGHTY WORKS OF JESUS

International Sunday School Lesson for March 15, 1942.

Golden Text: "What manner of man is this, that even the winds and the sea obey him?"—Matt. 8:27.

Lesson Text: Matthew 8:23-34; 4:35-41; Luke 8:26-56.

Miracles give many people great concern in this modern scientific age. This does not mean that one is necessarily a heretic. However, in these days of the radio, wireless and other almost mysterious developments which we have come to accept without question, it does seem strange that anyone should question the mircles performed by Jesus, the son of God.

Dr. W. M. Bowie says: "Even on a strictly scientific basis, the miracles of the New Testament story are not put altogether out of court, and the man who persists in believing them need not let himself be called a back number. Just as one may have some misgivings and difficulties touching New Testament miracles and still be a devout and earnest Christian, so one may accept the miracles without much questioning and still be in touch with his own ultra scientific age. Science as a matter of fact, isn't nearly so dogmatic about miracles as it was some time ago."

The first miracle recorded in our lesson for this week shows how Jesus stilled the sudden storm when his frightened disciples roused him from his sleep with the question: "Carest thou not that we perish?"

Whether Jesus actually stopped the storm or whether his confidence was the result of an abiding faith in the providence of God is immaterial. In either event, he displayed the remarkable power of a strong faith. The human soul that can call into activity a reserve of trust and confidence in a time of great danger exhibits genuine faith in its highest form.

"To set them thinking of him, to give them truer thoughts of the Rabbi whom they loved but did not understand, to teach them that he was Lord of all, and to win them to deeper trust in him—this was what the storm came for and was hushed for. And this is what our disasters and happy fortunes come for, our tempests and our calms, our perils and deliverances. They come to set us thinking of him who in the quiet everyday course of life we are too apt to forget. They come to teach us that he is always with us, ordering all things according to the good pleasure of his will, and to constrain us to trust in him instead of in ourselves, by making us feel how utterly we are in his hands."—Samuel Cox.

Landing on the opposite shore of the sea, Jesus cured a man who was out of his mind. The lesson of this incident is well stated by J. D. Jones —"Is not this a parable of the way in which human society seeks to deal with those wild passions that still rage in the hearts of men?

"All that society seeks to do with these fierce passions and lusts of the soul is to curb and restrain them to keep them within bounds, to prevent them from becoming dangerous, to limit their powers of mischief. All our laws and prohibitions are to us what his chains were to his wild Garasene. Law, backed up by prisons and reformatories, and policemen and punishments, has rarely attempted anything more than to restrain men, and even this modest ambition it has failed to realize."

In Jesus' day, the people believed that evil spirits could take possession of human beings but Theodore H. Robinson points out the temporary character of the idea: "It is possible to escape from a literal acceptance of these beliefs by remembering that every age sees, describes and explains it in its own way. It may even be held that a coincidence, the cure of an insane patient by the strong personal magnetism of Jesus, together with one of those wild panics to which swine are said to be subject, has influenced the narrative. There can, however, be no question as to the reality of the cure of this man, and of the results of this cure."

The point in both of these incidents is that Jesus was primarily interested in man. All his work was done for the benefit of man. His calmness and faith on the Sea of Galilee made his companions more courageous and caused them not to fear as long as their lives were linked with divine purposes. His miraculous cure on the other shore is important because of its effect upon the insane man, who was made whole and well, rather than for any commentary on the theory about demons. Word pictures, as has often been said, must not always be taken completely literally.

"World Do Move" Especially In Autos

The surprise of the number of men under arms in the armies of Europe and Asia, the number of airplanes, ships and tanks that had been built before this war shows that the world do move. But nowhere is it more noticeable than in the automobile industry in our country—and here's the proof:

1940—No gear shift.
1941—No running boards.
1942—No automobiles.

Wooden Automobile Tire Must Be Kept Well-Oiled

Brookline, Mass., Mar. 6.—Harry H. Johnson has invented a wooden automobile tire, four oak sections on each side, held with pegs. The wooden ring is filled with sawdust and the inventor uses oil to keep the filling from going dry. Mr. Johnson says he has demonstrated the tire to motor manufacturers and has left a model in Washington.
