SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON
MISSION OF THE SEVENTY

International Sunday School Lesson for April 12, 1942.

Golden Text: "The harvest indeed is plenteous, but the laborers are few; pray ye therefore, the Lord of the harvest, that he send forth laborers into his harvest."—Luke 10:2

(Lesson Text: Luke 10:1-24.)

The active ministry of Jesus lasted only about three years. It was confined, geographically, to a limited area. In point of spiritual preparation comparatively few men were ready and able to comprehend his revolutionary revelation. Yet, Jesus planned his mission so as to reach after all men eventually, everywhere.

in every age.

How then, did he expect to overcome the physical limitations of his presence and overcome the restrictions of time? The answer is revealed in our lesson. Jesus set the perfect example, holding up truth and love in its infinity of reach but making it concrete and actual in a model life. These about him, after their own conversion, were to multiply the extent of his own contact. That is how the Kingdom of Heaven has been spread thru successive ages.

First, Jesus sent out his 12 apostles on what might be termed an experimental missionary tour. Upon these men, primarily, would soon fall the entire responsibility of proclaiming the gospel. It was necessary, therefore, for them to initiate themselves in their great work of representing him while he was yet alive and active so that they could better do the same when he had passed beyond the earthly stage. His brief instructions for their task are repeated for us by Luke.

Constantly by his own life, Jesus was teaching truth to his followers. Unlimited resources were revealed in feeding the 5,000 and the cure of the demoniac boy emphasized their dependence upon spiritual power. The transfiguration confirmed the glory of Jesus and Peter's confession furnished a specific example of personal testimony.

In rebuking the ambitions of the 12, Jesus illustrated what true greatness was and in foretelling his own atonement sought to picture the unchecked response of divine love to human need. Thru such a course of training, based on a single, perfect life, Jesus demonstrated how other peoples and other ages were to be won for the Kingdom.

Subsequently Jesus sent seventy other followers to proclaim his good tidings, "70" was a symbolic number—Moses appointed 70 elders, the Sanhedrin had 70 members; "70" represented in mystical philosophy all of mankind.

The gospel of Jesus was not restricted for a few. The 70 sent out were not confined to any race—the injunction to "eat such things as are set before you" showed that they were to associate with Gentiles who might serve unceremonial food. Unarmed, with no purse (either to keep money of their own or so as not to collect from new converts), no material resources, and with no part in social entertainment, these men were sent to their tasks.

How shall Christianity be spread today? Churches fail when they depend on vast material resources—the greatest successes have followed the preparatory work of sincere, earnest missionaries, who acted solely and often alone, in the hope of transforming heathen darkness with Christian light.

As Paul proclaimed the gospel of peace in hostile regions, as Paton's unselfish devotion won the South Sea cannibals, as Livingstone went into "Darkest Africa" with no resources but love and faith, so have great results been inaugurated.

The example of the individual's life outweighs all mechanical repetitions and sacrificial service is more potent than any sermon. Those professing Christianity must live it sincerely to win others in this or any other land.

"There is but one thing you have to fear in heaven or earth — being untrue to your best selves and therefore, untrue to God," wrote Chas. Kingsley.

Europe was not only evangelized but civilized by Christian missionaries," says Dean George Hodge, who adds: "The same work can be done again in Africa and Asia. What is needed is that strong men of courage and patience, of wisdom to plan and will to execute, of large views and long vision, filled with the spirit of Christian consecration shall go in the name of Jesus Christ as the disciples went in the beginning, and win for him the empires of China, the empire of Japan, and the empire of India, as they won the empire of Rome. It waits only for the men to do it."
