SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON
 International Sunday School Lesson for April 19, 1942.
 Golden Text: "He that is not with me is against me; and he that gathereth not with me scattereth." — Luke 11:23.
 Lesson Text: Luke 11:15-54; 13:31-35.
 A virtue greatly needed in this modern age is sincerity. Simple candor and straight dealing in our commercial, political, social and religious life. Hypocrisy and falsehood are always the masks for the evil and imperfect. Truth can harm no honest cause and every deviation therefrom or concealment there of has its motive in wrong being accomplished thereby.

 Particularly in the religious sphere of action we should condemn cant and hypocrisy. We should earnestly and courageously seek the truth, which can and will make men free — of superstition, of bigotry, of evil. Every man has the right to demand of his neighbor, not agreement with his own principles and ideals, but honesty and sincerity in presenting and exhibiting what ever of opinion and judgment that has come to him.
 The conduct of Jesus and his disciples was often the subject of carping criticism from the Pharisees and scribes. The Sabbath was not observed properly, their personal associates were not fit, and, in today's lesson, he was denounced for eating with unwashed hands. This did not imply that his hands were physically dirty or filthy, but that the ceremonial requirements of washing had not been observed.
 The "tradition of the elders" referred to that body of the law, handed down verbally and by progressive interpretation and elaboration, which had grown so comprehensive and burdensome and which had been so exalted that the keeping of its letter and technicalities was considered of more moment than genuine and simple religious worship and a life in harmony with the principles of righteousness.
 The critics of Jesus and his disciples seeking to discredit him with the crowd, then as always, very conservative and intolerant of religious advance from any accepted existing standard, accused them of violating the traditional Jewish religious rites as established by the ancient authorities and upheld by the ecclesiastical leaders of the day in the Sanhedrin and the synagogues.
 The defense of Jesus was by way of counter-attack. He replied by charging that these same critics violated the law of God, not that of the elders, and proved the accusation by exposing the hypocritical casuistry whereby many Jews escape the divine laws regarding their duty to parents (Exodus 20:12 and 21:17) by falsely pretending that their wealth had been pledged to the church; thus "making void the word of God by your tradition," which allowed such equivocation to satisfy the requirement of the law.

In a simple, unanswerable presentation, Jesus showed the vital distinction between the pharisaical insistence on unnecessary ceremonial ritual and his own teaching about righteousness. How foolish it was to believe that any man could be rendered unclean and sinful by merely associating with or having incidentally brushed the idea that the eating of food not killed and cleaned in certain prescribed and mechanical method could make a man wicked.
 Religion was not, Jesus declared, nor is it now, a matter of observing such rules and regulations, but a mode of living. The evil in the lives of men came not from without but from unclean and impure hearts "for not from without, but out of the heart of men proceed evil thoughts, adulteries, fornications, murders, thefts, covetousness, deceit, wickedness, lasciviousness and evil eye, blasphemy, pride, foolishness—all these things come from within and defile the man."

In our day these words have a potent application. True religion and genuine worship does not consist in formal beliefs, traditional creeds, ecclesiastical forms, intellectual patronage of the moral and philosophical truth of Christianity or any superficial and hypocritical conformance to the popular, accepted notions about these things, but in the full, free, honest and everyday life in accordance with the fundamental requirements of love, justice, purity, honesty, mercy and service.
 The Christian should uphold and support the church only as a means to righteous living, not as receiving and independent virtue in forms and customs in themselves.
