SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

SUNDAY: THE DAY OF ACCLAM

International Sunday School Lesson for May 3, 1942

Golden Text: "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord."

Lesson Text: Mark 11:1-11; Luke 19:41-44.

We are beginning the study of the final events in the life of Jesus, which took place in Jerusalem during the Passion Week. Last week we witnessed Jesus and his disciples on their journey to Jerusalem, and considered his conversations along the way. In Jericho, Bartimeus, the blind beggar, restored his sight thru faith in Christ. Zachaeus, the chief publican, was honored by a visit to his home, resulting in his salvation thru repentance and restoration. At Bethany Mary anointed Jesus with costly ointment, arousing the resentment of Judas, the treasurer.

Close to Jerusalem, Jesus sent two of his disciples to secure a colt and bring it back to him for his entry into the City. Many think Peter and John were the two disciples who attended to this detail. They were instructed to reply to any who questioned their act, "the Lord hath need of him." Following the directions received, these disciples found that this statement smoothed away all objection and they carried the colt to the Master.

There are many professing followers of Jesus today who have not yet learned the meaning of submitting their own property and resources to the advancement of his cause. In a countless number of ways, demands are made for support of his purposes today and many are refused thru selfishness or indifference.

Jesus, riding the colt and followed by a vast throng of pilgrims, moved towards Jerusalem, only to be met by another crowd which came out from the city to see him. These latter turned about, forming the advance of the triumphant crowd, which attended his enthusiastic entry into the city. He was greeted with fervor. Garments and branches were spread before his pathway. For these few hours Jesus enjoyed the approbation and acclaim of the multitude and his disciples shared in the reflected glory.

The procession was somewhat different from what many had expected, as can be understood from a selection in Lew Wallace's great book, "Ben Hur." "I beheld the procession descend the mountain bringing him," said the Egyptian to Ben Hur. "I heard them singing. They were beautiful with palms in motion. I looked everywhere among them for a figure with a promise of royalty—a horseman in purple, a chariot with a driver in shining brass, a stately warrior behind an orb shield, rivaling his spear in stature. I looked for his guard. It would have been pleasant to have seen a prince of Jerusalem and a cohort of the legions of Galilee. Instead of a Caesar helmeted and sworded, I saw a Man, riding an ass' colt."

The Jerusalem crowd expected momentous events to follow the arrival of the Messiah. They wanted a Messiah cast in the mold of their own desires and expectations. When this failed to materialize the neck multitude became apathetic and some hostile.

The ovation which greeted his coming was not the prelude to a proclamation of his temporal rulership, nor did it signalize the time of some gigantic miracle. The crowd discovered without understanding that the Kingdom of God was not of this world. When night fell came Jesus went back to Bethany with his disciples; his hour of popular glory had come and gone.

As we study during the next few weeks the stirring events of this far off week, we should not detach it from our present everyday living. As the Jerusalem multitude abandoned Jesus because it did not fully grasp his truth, so we may be in danger of losing our acceptance of him in a maze of surrounding dogmas and doctrines which obscure his divine purpose and his revealed mission.

May we not in our loyalty to him be as insincere and superficial as were these people who enthusiastically acclaimed him as their king, only to reject him within the week? Do we carry our loyalty into every activity of our lives? As far as the individual is concerned, the fate of Jesus in Jerusalem nineteen centuries ago is not so vital as his acceptance or rejection by each heart in this modern day.
