SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON
THURSDAY: THE LAST DAY WITH THE DISCIPLES
International Sunday School Lesson for May 24, 1942.
Golden Text: "This do in remembrance of me." Luke 22:19.
(Lesson Text: Luke 22:7-23)
Our last lesson closed with a day of controversy. The enemies of Jesus sought to trap him several times by propounding perplexing questions, each of which he answered in such a way as to avoid the pitfalls intended for him. He spent his last active days teaching. Jesus also took opportunity to warn his disciples against those who would falsely claim the allegiance which was due himself. He realized that it was a matter of a few hours before his departure and wanted to fortify his followers as far as possible for the trials and persecution which would beset them. He warned them of many disastrous calamities, of families divided and hatred engendered, but reassured them that not one of their hairs would perish, therefore "in your patience possess ye your souls!" He admonished them to watch and pray, not allowing their hearts to be overcharged with pleasure and other interests to the exclusion of his own kingdom. The Passover was the largest of the Jewish festivals commemorating the great deliverance from the tenth plague, which had been successful in bringing the Jews out of Egypt. While the religious leaders were desirous of killing Jesus, they feared the wrath of the multitude which had gathered in Jerusalem for the event. These leaders may have been convinced that they were performing a religious service but their thinking was warped by a very selfish determination to preserve their own privileges. Judas offered to betray his Master, either for the money, as is generally accepted, or in the hope that a crisis would force Jesus to exert his own power.

"The Paschal Feast was a family feast, at which the head of the family presided," says G. Campbell Morgan. "Here, then, was something strange, something different; a group of men all away from their own homes. They were guests in the house of another man, and that man was not presiding; he had left the room. Yet this was a family gathering, but it was a new family! Jesus was the Head. He took charge. He presided, as the father of the household always presided at the Paschal Feast. Here was a new kinship. Away back in his ministry he had said one day, "Who is my mother, who are my brethren and my sisters? They that do the will of my God." Here they were, that little group with him, the new family.
Jesus arranged to make his last evening with his disciples an occasion which they would always remember and instituted a model commemorative service. Upon these few men would rest the weight of his kingdom and the ultimate success of the mission of Jesus would be determined by the faith and power of these intimate followers in the days which were to come.
With the responsibility to be assumed, Jesus made his last supper with them a source of unending spiritual inspiration, not only to those who have thru the succeeding centuries adopted his teachings and professed to follow him. They gathered in the upper room of a Jerusalem room, which was to become the scene of many historic events in the early church.
The memorial ceremony was very simple and effective. As he passed the bread to them he made it the symbol for his own body which would soon be broken on the cross. As they drank from the cup then and always afterwards the drink became symbolical of his blood which was shed for their own shortcomings.
While a large body of believers accept the theory that these symbols became real, the fact that Jesus used them in a representative way is apart from the fact that he was alive when the first supper was observed. So, today, in many lands and to countless thousands, the communion is a memorial of the love and suffering of Jesus.
"We eat bread and we drink wine but the great thing is what we are doing in our minds at the same time," says Richard Roberts. "There is no magic at this table. It means that our minds may do with Jesus, with the life that was in him, what our bodies do with bread and wine. That is assimilation. There is nothing out of the common in this. Two people who love one another assimilate one another. They share each other's life. Friends—as it were, penetrate and indwell each other. In fellowship, we absorb each other. So communion with Christ grows into union with Christ. Communion is the mind with Jesus of Nazareth; communion in the soul with the ever living Christ. In the mind dwelling with Jesus in Galilee, in the spirit aspiring to the Christ at the right hand of God. Keeping company with him and living among men accordingly."

Rogers' Yankee Swamps Gath's Dodgers 15-5
Interest and Merrimac In Local Softball League Games Steadily Increasing Next Game Monday

The expected power of the Yankees finally broke loose might to blast "Mike" Gath's Dodgers out of first place. The Yankees won 15 to 5. The hungry Yankees wasted little time in nailing down the verdict by combining timely hitting with play of the Dodgers to score runs in the first two innings. Bert Rogers twirled a steely arm for the winners, notching strike-outs. Howard McAndrew four straight hits, including home runs.

In the second game of the series Max Richardson's single in the winning run to tie the Giants undisputed possession of place as the Giants came behind to trip the Cardinals. The Cardinals took an early lead but failed to hold it as the Giants tied for three runs in the sixth.

This Monday night the Yankees will attempt to continue their winning streak at the expense of the Cardinals while the Cardinals will try to break the Yankees' streak.
