SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

GOD, THE CREATOR International Sunday School Lesson for July 5, 1942

Golden Text: "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth." Genesis 1:1.

Lesson Text: Genesis 1: 1-2; 24-31: 2:1.

Our lessons for the third quarter are taken from the Book of Genesis. The book is given its name by the first word in it which, translated from the original Hebrew means, in the beginning. Literally, this is the starting point of the book.

Genesis is the first of five books making up the Hebrew Pentateuch. The authorship of these books was for a long time ascribed to Moses, but Genesis is now regarded as the compilation of extracts from earlier records by a writer who lived long after Moses was dead. This should not lessen respect for the book nor the lessons which we draw from it.

The Book of Genesis may be divided into two main parts. The first eleven chapters give the Hebrew tradition regarding the creation and early history of the earth and mankind, as revealed to their earliest leaders and passed down by tradition to subsequent generations. This first part includes the story of creation, of Adam and of his descendants, and Noah and his sons.

The second part brings us the story of the Patriarchs, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and Joseph. The entire book gives us the origin and development of the Hebrew people, written from a religious standpoint to show them as God's chosen people.

The story of creation, as contained in Genesis, has caused much argument. The critics ignore entirely the spirit and purpose of the recital and arbitrarily pick upon this passage or that, interpreting literally, in an effort to disprove its assertions. There is no occasion for any of the faithful to be worried about this attack.

Genesis was never intended as a scientific document — it is written in spiritual terms and for religious purposes. In attempting to write the record of creation in a few words, it is like reducing the map of a continent to a single square inch.

Very clearly in the book the supreme fact of an active Creator is set forth, whose intelligence and planning was responsible for the world in which man lived, and man himself.

No thoughtful person contemplating the universe today, can honestly believe that it was the product of mere chance. The order and regularity of creation denies an origin governed entirely by accident. As well might the manufacturer of a typewriter, or any other modern machine, place the scattered parts of a box and shake them together in the expectation that they would assemble themselves.

The wonders of astronomy or of chemistry, or of any other phase of creation, revealed to the intelligent application of the human mind, all point to an intelligent, beneficent and planning intelligence in their creator.

The first chapter of Genesis pictures the creation of the universe and its occupants. Two parallel sets of three periods (called days) are given us. The first day, according to Professor W. G. Ellsieble, gives us the sphere of light, and the fourth day tenants it with sun, moon and stars. The second day presents the realm of air and water and the fifth inhabits it with birds and fishes. The third day produces habitable, dry land, and the sixth provides it with animals and man.

It is interesting to notice that the order of creation of the plants and animals agrees with the development of geology and the formation of the stellar universe and the origin of the earth is readily reconcilable to the deductions of the astronomers.

The supreme act of creation was the origin of man, made in the image of God. Therefore, man has: (1) an immortal soul; (2) an intelligent mind; (3) a conscience; (4) an individualistic personality; (5) a will of his own; (6) an idea of moral righteousness; and (7) is endowed with affections, the capacity to love.

These items are pointed out by Professor Ira M. Price, who adds, "with all these qualifications he was made ruler of all the earth." So we find man supreme in the world today, able to reclaim deserts and affect the physical geography of the globe. Like wise, he dominates all other animals and uses the vegetable world to contribute to his own needs and happiness. In the mechanical, chemical and electrical forces of nature he has projected his mastery and made them serve his needs.
