LESSON SUNDAY SCHOOL JACOB SEEKS GOD'S HELP International Sunday School Lesson for August 30, 1942. Golden Text: "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble."—Psalm 46:1. Lesson Text: Genesis 31:2-12, 27-29. Our first lesson about Jacob told of a deceitful fraud upon his old father, Isaac, and a wrong accomplished against his twin brother, Esau, robbing him of the birthright and paternal blessing. Our present lesson tells of the reconciliation of the brothers 20 years later and presents forcibly the mutual pleasure and benefit which resulted from forgetting the past and living for the future. For 14 years Jacob served his father-in-law and uncle, Laban, without pay as a dowry for his two daughters, Leah and Rachael, especially the latter who was the object of Jacob's undying affection primarily. At the end of that period Jacob suggested the advisability of leaving Laban's service, but was persuaded to stay on wages thereafter, altho the crafty Laban thought the terms of payment would work only in his favor. Jacob's keen ability, however, saw that his interests were protected and Jacob grew wealthy year by year until Laban adopted a new attitude. While Jacob was laboring to make Laban rich, it was well and good, but now that Jacob was profiting Laban's friendliness declined. Jacob saw this and, after talking the matter over with his two wives, decided to depart secretly, fearing that Laban might take his property and wives from him by force otherwise. It is well to note the character of the relationship between Jacob and Laban. The latter was crafty and selfish, having fooled Jacob in the matter of marriage, having changed his wages ten times in an effort, presumably to get the better of him, and always proving a hard taskmaster and an exact employer. Jacob reminded him how he had been required to answer for cattle torn by beasts and stolen by night or day, "of my hands hast thou required it." Jacob's service had been efficient; he had come to Laban small in resources and built up for him great possibilities; he had been unsparing in his efforts for Laban, "in the day the drought consumed me and the frost by night, and my sleep departed from mine eyes," that proper care be taken of Laban's flocks. Stealthily Jacob started on his return journey to his own native land. Laban pursued him, but after overtaking him they parted forever in friendliness. Mizpah was built and it has come thru the ages as a symbol for the separation of loved ones, "the Lord watch between me and thee when we are absent one from another." So, Jacob continued his return journey, but no sooner had he eased his mind on the subject of Laban's anger and vengeance than new spectres presented themselves to disturb the peacefulness of his soul. Jacob was going home—what of his brother Esau, whom he had wronged, and from whom no token had come during these score of years? What fate awaited the homecoming Jacob? The fear of Esau's wrath possessed Jacob, as well it might, for had not Esau openly proclaimed a purpose to kill him? Jacob did his best to avert such an evil and proceeded diplomatically in his efforts to allay Esau's anger. Messengers were dispatched to "my lord" Esau by "thy servant" Jacob, but the only information they could bring back was that Esau was approaching with 400 armed men. No wonder Jacob was greatly afraid and distressed in mind, and in his need he went to God in prayer, the proper thing for mortal man to do. Confessing his unworthiness, admitting his fears, Jacob pled with God for deliverance. At the same time he continued his efforts to propitiate Esau. Goats, sheep, camels, kine, and other animals were sent forward in groups under different servants as gifts and peace offerings to Esau in an effort to make right the wrong of years ago. No man can avoid responsibility for wrong-doing, however, and the inevitable day of judgment comes. Jacob journeying homeward, and Esau coming to meet him, hastened the hour when in the distance Jacob saw the signs of Esau's approach. Perturbed in mind he resolutely faces the future, places his beloved Rachael and her son, Joseph, in the rear of all his company, and, trusting in his God, Jacob bravely moves to the advance of his caravan to meet the oncoming brother. What surprise and sweetness awaited him. "And Esau ran to meet him and embraced him, and fell on his neck and kissed him, and they wept." Score heavily for Esau who could forget and forgive and remark upon the good fortune of Jacob who had wronged a man with the capacity of mercy. Esau had prospered and was unwilling to allow a worn-out wrong to rob him of the happiness life could yet afford by the reconciliation with his brother. How badly the world needs such a spirit today!
