"Handle With Care"

The phrase "Handle With Care might apply to a box of dynamite.

The term may be just as aptly applied to a book. Both the dynamite and the book are valuable. One is priceless to the soldier, the other to student. Books are more valuable to us because they build up civilization, but the dynamite protects and preserves the democracy.

So, books are valuable and they should be handled very carefully.

There are a few rules we should ebserve when we are using a book.

1—Never handle a book when your hands are dirty or sticky.

2—Do not turn down corners on pages to mark your place when you stop reading.

Do not put bulky objects in a book.

4—Do not expose books to the When carrying them outweather. doors, protect them as much as possible.

Perhaps there are other rules by which you should abide, but there is no necessity to quote them. Just treat the book as you would your best friend. It will stand by you thruout thick and thin.

Pupils Taking Five Subjects Have Study Hall

There is a supervised study hall held in Room 222 from 3:10 to 3:45 every afternoon to enable pupils who are taking five subjects to keep up their scholastic record in school.

A faculty member is in charge of that study hall for the purpose of aiding the students in any difficulties which might confront them.

If the pupils do satisfactory work within the face for the pupils of the face for the face within the first five weeks period they will not be compelled to stay the next five weeks. "Satisfactory work" means that each student must maintain an average of 70 per cent in all subjects, with none below 65 per cent.

"The Bells Didn't Ring!"

"For tomorrow's assignment, read chapter two, look up the first fifteen questions, and be prepared for a fast. The bell will ring in a min-ute," stated one teacher.

One minute, two and three, and the bell didn't ring! Confusion reigned for a moment when it didn't sound at said time.

The cause, we later determined, must have been due to the fact that the clocks had stopped, halting the bells. Altho it was a bit bewildering, we very nicely got to and from classes on time, thanks to the time-pieces of the faculty.

Introducing Miss Heinzelmann

This year Andover's students welcome a new teacher, Miss Elaine Heinzelmann of Hawthorne, N. Y. Miss Heinzelmann is teaching mathematics in the place of Mr. McGee, who is teaching at Bedford Hills this

'PREVIEW ON SPORTS"

Andover Central School will make its greatest sacrifice to the war ef-fort this year when it drops touch-football and starts a fall intramural program.

Andover started playing touch football three years ago and has im-proved rapidly since then. Last year the locals won the Steuben year the locase won the Steuben county touch-football league over Addison and Arkport and also won the trophy. The Purple and White again have nearly the same material as last year and would have had an outstanding year had the sport been continued.
