He Smokes Chesterfields . . . And Satisfies!

Donning our coats and hats, we rushed from school and briskly walked down the street. We hurriedly stopped into Dr. S. B. Scott's impressive waiting room. My friend and I waited, wondering what the other people were there for. Seeing that we had a long wait, I tried to study my history but found it impossible because of the thrilling, romantic serial of Doctor Jim Brent on the small radio that stood on the mantle.

Assuming that I could not do my uninteresting studies, I scanned a magazine, looking at the numerous illustrations.

I was just beginning to become deeply interested in reading a magazine when Mrs. Ordway, the receptionist, announced that we were next. Persuading my friend to go with me, we uncertainly entered the doctor's office.

There sat Doctor Scott, attired in an expertly tailored gray suit, nonchalantly smoking a Chesterfield cigarette.

Andover's one and only doctor has been summoned by the War Department to remain here temporarily. Upon further questioning, I found that Dr. Scott was born in Lynchburg, Virginia. He always wanted to be a doctor and that his father had been a doctor.

When he isn't working he spends many leisure hours on Greenwood Hill at his cottage. While here he keeps in tune with his favorite pastimes, hunting and fishing. If we could stop in at his cottage some time we'd hear him at his most common habit, whistling.

Dr. Scott is especially active in the Elks Club at Wellsville. Being school doctor keeps him "on the jump"—ask Bebe Dean, she makes trips at regular intervals to get bandaged up. VML
