Have you seen a little lad cheerfully skipping thru the halls and wondered where such a hap-J boy would be going at that same particular time each Monday? He, in patched britches and darned socks, is always smiling and surprisingly eager to commence work. You see, he's an ever-dependable employee of Miss Anderson, our librarian.

Little Jimmy skids along on his knees from shelf to shelf dusting while thinking of new inmaginative adventures that he may experience. He may be a famous trainer of beautiful white horses, or a courageous hunter of wild animals in the African jungles, but his work is always done whole-heartedly. Just a glance at the bottom shelves of the library ■ [will prove this.

When his job is completed he returns to Miss Anderson who gives him a total salary of twenty cents. With his beaming face he thanks Miss Anderson, and skips on down the hall as happy or happier than he was when he first entered. Proudly he carries the two silver coins to the desk "Two Defense Stamps please," he says. And here we leave this little lad, but we shall see him again—he's always on the job. His name is Jimmy Grossman, a truly patriotic citizen. We should have more
