Conservation does not mean just to preserve. or to protect, or to nurture. It does, however, carry those ideas. It is definitely opposed to destruction, extravagance and neglect. Conservation is nothing temporary or occasional, or epidemic. It must be continuous and constructive and profitable. In this sense, conservation should influence our daily lives and everything we do because in the last analysis, and in using the word in its broadest sense, it means doing the right thing all of the time. So conservation applies to our individual habits at home, in the office, and in public places like the forests and the fields and on the waterways.

Conservation means wise use of time, funds, material, health and natural resources, such as the forests, the soils and wild life, the use that, under all .interest of society.
