Memorial Day

1947

By JOSEPH AUSLANDER

Sprawled on the cliff, spreadeagled in the wheat;

In all the hell-holes of earth's far-flung spaces;

But hail no less the lads who moaned for water,

And died, remembering distant fields and faces.

When speeches, drums and salvos boom and bark,

Now that the final blood-soaked ridge is taken,

Salute our heroes who survived the slaughter

Now, while the victory smells bittersweet,

It is too simple, when the sun is kind,

To Joe or Mike or Johnny in the dark—

That quiet kid from your own city block

Whose courage stained some high heroic rock.

Of "... there's some corner of a foreign field

That is forever-Boston-Butte-St. Paul-"

Some Soldier's little town from here or there,

And time will blow his glory everywhere-

While his sweat honors the dense Solomons.

While his flesh blooms in Norman daffodils,

While a sick world drinks from the soul of youth

By our young dead from Saipan to Saint Lo,

By Huertgen Forest and the crimson snow,

By statesmen haggling in the market-place,

By solemn pledges freely made—and broken;

By one lad, stiff beneath his stone, and colder,

The fingerprints of planets on each shoulder,

His hopes, his dreams reduced to blinding ash;

By him, his comrades and their faith betrayed

Or kept, we shall be watched, we shall be weighed.

By blood and sweat commingled, words unspoken,

While his blood brightens the Italian hills,

While Africa and Burma suck his bones,

American courage and American truth.

By freedom's flag on Suribachi flying,

By curlews over lonely crosses crying;

By the hard anger in the veteran's face,

His pride and fury cancelled in a flash,

And we will write his name up on a wall,

To be as deaf, oblivious and blind

Our orators, on future holidays,

Will work a new deposit, a rich yield,

And roll the fine resounding paraphrase

Never forget the boys no bells will waken,
