Proclamation

Teachers perform a vital role in increasingly complex world society. They are entrusted with developing in the large part, our Country's one priceless asset—the ounsters who are growing up to become the leaders of tomorrow. We entrust our teachers with the most responsible and exacting task of helping our children acquire the knowledge, skills and humane philosophy that make for successful careers and good cit-

We charge our teachers with helping to mold the character of our youth by teaching them the intrinsic worth and dignity of the individual by instructing them not only on their own rights, but on the rights of others, by inspiring in them a feeling for the brotherhood of all mankind.

Our teachers unhesitatingly accept the challenge and responsibilities we place upon them, working conscientiously and well to strengthen our system of education—and to keep it what it is. In paying tribute to them for their industry devotion, patience and many high achievements we should recognize each of us, that our teachers in performing their role need the active interest and support of all of us. THEREFORE, I Hugh Barlow,

Mayor of Andover, New York, do hereby proclaim May 13, 1958 as Teacher Recognition Day and call upon the people of this community to join in paying appropriate honor to their teachers for the services they perform.
