I Thank You, Ancestors by Jean Updyke

There are many things to be thankful for and they go to you your, Ancestors. I thank you for this large and bountiful land. For this soil so fertile that it makes us the rich and productive nation that we are. Without these, gone would be the rolling fields of graim, the pastures of cows, and all that is a symbol of America. Without these we would be backward and dependent on other countries for our survival.

I thank you, Ancestors, for the birthright of, living in freedom renderer à democratic nation. In this country we have the right to be satellite-builders or ballet dancers, or any other occupation we choose. Due to you, Ancestors, this is a democratic country like no other in the world.

I thank you, Ancestors, for the factories that, speak of a highly industralized nation. The factorses of an America not content to stand still but must forever be moving forward. The factories that turn out not only missiles and machinery for war, but one that turns out television sets, automatie washing machines and automobiles to an extent that for surpasse any other country.

Yes. I thank you, Ancestors, for the rich land, the freedoms, and the factories. I thank you, for it is you that made us what we are today. Perhaps someday someone will thank us for our contributions.

First Impressions by Dick Baker

How important are first impressions? That is a question which is often asked. What are your thoughts when you meet a like him. In most instances this opinion is not changed even after you get to know the person better. Why this is so is hard to explain.

The situation exists, however, and you must strive to make the most of it. When you meet a new person, whether it is a new classmate or neighbor, you should try to be neat and pleasant for you are also making your first impression on them.

Maybe when you meet a new person you should not try to form an impression until you get to
