Screen star Alan Ladd helps son David inspect the basement of their Hollywood home for fire hazards in observance of National Fire Prevention Week (Oct. 5-11). David, who is 10 and a rising actor in his own right, is one of four million youngsters who will qualify as Junior Fire Marshals in the year-round public service program sponsored by the Hartford Fire Insurance Company. To qualify as Junior Fire Marshals, children check hazards listed on a "home inspection report" in the fall issue of the Junior Fire Marshal magazine. Finding paint cans with loose tops, young Ladd shows dad how to make them less likely to become fire hazards by pounding them shut with a hammer. This and other fire prevention tips are part of the Hartford Fire's program to make boys and girls more safety conscious.
