after 16 years as dean and 45 years on the Cornell facutly. Dr. Palm will head one of the nation's largest agricultural colleges. It is charged by the State living for both farm and city peothrough research, extension, and resident instruction.

A unit of the State University of New York, the college has nearly 1,600 undergraduate students second only to Iowa in this respect. There are 18 departments in the College at Ithaca and six departments at the New York State Agricultural Experiment Station in Geneva—a division of he College. The College conducts about 800 research projects in Ithaca and Geneva as well as in laboratories and on experimental farms thruout the State.

In addition, it cooperates with County Extension Associations and the U.S. Department of Agriculture in operating a Statewide Extension Service with agents in 56 counties.

Dr. Palm will become the Col-L. A. M. Junior Church (in lege's seventh dean. He is now Douglas War- director of the Cornell University Agricultural Experiment Station and research director for both the State Colleges of Agriculture and Home Economics. He is the former head of the Agriculure College's Department of Entomology and Limnology.

Although dominated by industry and commerce, New York is nevertheless one of the nation's leading agricultural states. Its farms produce nearly a billion dollars worth of products each year.

With a professional staff of 400, the College now has 14 major buildings in addition to barns, greenhouses, and other structures It uses 7500 acres of land.

Child's Independence

Try to let young children help themselves and take care of their own possessions, say the specialists, for it is by doing things on their own that youngsters gain independence and responsibility.

Of course, there are times when it is not convenient to allow a five year old to spend 45 minutes in dressing--when it is necessary to work out a compromise. But, generally speaking, give a child help if he asks for it, otherwise let him
