THE MARCH OF DIMES

by Lee Kessler

A few years ago, the dimes collected throughout the United States, marched to a victory over polio. Although this terrible disease which threatened the lives of thousands of children annually, has been nearly eradicated, the cause of the "March of Dimes" moves on. Polio was only one of many diseases which research sciences are trying to put an end to. Now their attention must be focused on others, until one by one, they are gradually eliminated from the daily scene.

So you see, we must continue to give to this worthy drive, for we are certain to reap the benefits of its harvest. One disease is conquered, but we must continue to support the Polio Foundation if it is to continue its life-saving march along the road leading to the ultimate destruction of paralytic diseases!

Senior Interview

Stepping into the spotlight this week is Encl Douglas Glover, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Harley Glover of 47 Rochambeau Avenue. Encl was born in Wellsville, September 15, 1944. He has two brothers, Ronald and Bill and one sister, Evelyn.

Encl was a member of the school band for two years and on the basketball team for one year. He also played soccer for two years.

His favorites include: food, pizza; color, black; subject, mechanical drawing; pastime, driving sport, soccer; car, "anything that runs"; saying "I don't care". His pet peeve is going to school and his philosophy is "have fun while you are still young."

Encl plans to attend the Williamsport Technical Institute next year.

Teen Talk

The problem of students dropping out of school is growing worse. One out of three students drop out of school.

For jobs nowadays, you must have at least a high school education and for most jobs, you must have additional education. By 1970, not more than 5% of all available jobs will be of the unskilled variety.

About 175,000 girls, each year, are dropping out of school to get married. Many young people's capabilities are lost annually because these young people are discouraged.

Reading is the fundamental educational skill. Without it no one can do well in any subject. Drop-outs fail three times as courses as those who stay in school. Nine out of every ten drop-outs have had to repeat at least one year in some grade.

Seventy-five percent of the drop outs score an IQ above 90 and 13% of the drop-outs had the IQ scores above 110 so they are by no means illiterate.

Most drop-outs come from families of lower socio-economic categories, families where the father is missing, cultural background is limited, or where education is viewed with indifference or distrust if not open resentment. It is not all their fault.

Another reason students drop out of school is lack of social life. These students are much more dissatisfied with their social relationship in school than were the non-leavers. Girls are especially sensitive to snubs and lacking the right clothes. Researchers have found that students who leave school don't take part in outside activities because they are rejected by other students or lack of money.

Maybe this will give you a few ideas on how to start in your own community, first, by helping students to have the courage to finish school.

Purple And White

by "Mes"

Last Friday night, January 18, Andover was defeated by Friendship Varsity, 53-43; and Junior Varsity, 35-22.

Even though the Panthers lost the game, they certainly did show a hard-working performance. Due to illness, Dan Stackwick was not able to play, but Ike Conners and Don Gibbs scored high marks. Doug Mulholland, Jim Cannon, Ike Conner, Dave Thorp, Joe Carr and Bill Childs all put in a battle and made Friendship really work for their points.

To reward the team for their hard work, let's all turn out to give the team the spirit they certainly deserve. Since Mid-Year Tests will be over this week ending January 25, this definitely will be an excellent opportunity for the Andover students to give the team all the support they need.

See you at the game Friday, January 25th!

The Guest For Popularity

by Alice Gross

Ask any teenager what he or she wants, and the answer will be "to be popular". The goal may be to be queen of a current school event, president of his class, date the most "popular" members of the opposite sex, or to be captain of a sports team, but each goal represents the want to be liked by others.

This desire to be liked is natural, but the results of it can lead to much frustration. Often a high schooler's decisions are based on what others would do and not on his desires. Girls will date someone they dislike rather than feel "out of it". You can always find a copy of the more liked students. Unfortunately the copies "are stifling their own individuality and interests."

If we examine closely, we see that the "copies" are never successful. The original Picasso, the genuine antique, the unique Paris dress, is much more valued than any imitation could be. In our aims to please others, let's not forget that each of us can be an "original."
