In Commercial Banks in

1963

Americans Have:

Some 60 million checking accounts . . .

Some $70 billion in individual savings . . .

Some $19 billion in installment loans outstanding . . .

1963 is the Centennial of the National Currency Act—which provided not only for a national currency but also for national banks, to take their place alongside state-chartered banks. Under this dual banking system, the role of commercial banks in America's life has grown and grown.
