Different Deer?
 Seen any strange deer lately? If you have, the State Conservation Department would like to know—especially if the fleeting whitetail is sporting a brightly colored plastic streamer.

This is not a check of wayward delegates to a wildlife convention or a survey of the latest in animal fashions, but part of a study to determine how far deer travel during the warmer months.
 Last winter, Conservation Department biologists trapped several deer, attached plastic streamers to their ears and released them. Since then, the Department has been trying to keep tabs on the tagged animals to plot the distances deer travel when not hampered by snow and cold weather.

Reports that have trickled in so far indicate that freely ranging deer will travel up to 40 miles from their home area. Information on the tagging operation has been received mostly from interested persons who spot the deer while driving or hiking.
 More information is needed however, and the Department urges anyone spotting a rather fashionable deer with a brightly colored streamer to call collect Albany HE 9-9906 or drop a post card to: Big Game Research Project Research Laboratory, Delmar, New York.
