In this age of mechanization, it is hard to believe that there are still some things done manually. These jobs are usually not the most fun in the world, either. Take, for instance, the stable-hands in a large racing stable. The horses must be kept clean and be fed regularly. Yet, who gets the credit for a race-horse's fame? Most often the owner and trainer. Another example is the "spotter" in gymnastics. This is the person who never gets to do anything on the apparatus; the "spotter" is there to prevent spills from becoming injurious. Neither am I referring to those who "spot" once in a while.

Taken more for granted are the services of janitors and others who clean up after the rest of us have a "gay old time." Think what the situation would be if all others who clean up after the rest of us have a "gay old time." Think what the situation would be if all janitors, maids, and housewives went on strike. Quite a mess! If each of us could trade jobs, for just one day, with a person who does the dirty-work, we would see that these jobs can't be taken for granted, at least, not until these people can be replaced by robots. Then, all of us can take it easy and have fun.

Juniors Present Spring Play

The Juniors Present

Spring Play

The Juniors have been deligently rehearsing for their annual play—Onions in the Stew", a three act comedy by the author of "The Egg and I". It is to be staged at the Andover Central School auditorium on Friday, April 2, at 8:00 p. m.

Betty MacDonald, (Donna Brown) has talked her two daughters Ann (Debbie Dunham) and Joan (Jean Harvey) and her doubtful husband, Don (Ralph Weber) into sinking every cent they have in a house on an island in Puget Sound.

As the usual complications of island-life present themselves, the family stares wistfully across the bay toward the lights of the comfortable big city of Seattle. On the first day the tide comes in unexpectedly, finding half of their possessions on the beach. They catch a last glimpse of their washing machine bobbing out to sea. The girls see their entire future—boyfriends and all, drift away like the washing machine.

Everything Betty does to make this venture a success, backfires on her. Many problems arise. One, dinner guests are often with you days later; two, dates on the island are difficult; and three, any definite appointment causes the ferry boat to stop running.

Betty is sunk, miserable at having brought this apparent disaster on them all. Yet in the midst of all the difficulties and despair, the funty find special waster the life they are creating.
