

Speed Limit Raised On Route 81 And 87

Beginning Wednesday (April 1) the speed limit on the two newest New York State expressways—Route 81 and Route 87—were raised from the present 60 miles per hour to 5 miles per hour Motor Vehicle Commissioner William S. Hults, Chairman of the State Traffic Commission has announced.

"The increase is a result of our continuing program of setting realistic speed limits especially on highways constructed to accommodate such speed with safety," the Commissioner said.

"We have learned through our traffic engineering surveys, now that long stretches of these highways have been completed, that the higher speed rate of 5 miles per hour is warranted. Both the safety factor and convenience to motorists have been taken into consideration.

"Speed checks have indicated that the majority of motorists are not accepting the 0 mile limit as realistic for this type of highway. The normal 10-15 per cent of speed limit violations had increased up to 35 per cent on these roads and with no less driving safety," he continued.

"This means that by engineering standards, 0 miles an hour is too slow on many stretches."

On Interstate 81, the highway which when completed will stretch from the Pennsylvania border south of Binghamton northward through Cortland, Syracuse and Watertown to the Thousand Island Bridge leading to Canada, the new speed limit will be in effect for 68 miles.
