Greenwood Central School News

The Greenwood Central School Board of Education met for their regular meeting January 12, 1970. Mr. Wright reported to the Board that the Youth Corp job, now held by Rockie Ford, would be eliminated January 31. The Board agreed to hire Rockie, at the minimum wage, from local funds. The same B.O.C.E.S. services and Vocational Technical openings we have this year, will be requested for next year plus psychological services and art 1.5 time for each service, and use of data processing services for taxes, census and attendance.

A discussion was held on post-graduates attending B.O.C.E.S. Vocational Technical School. Mr. Wright recommended that the students be allowed to finish the sequence they have started, but any student who has graduated then desires to start a sequence at B.O.C.E.S. be denied. The Board approved his recommendation.

A policy was approved giving the Supervising Principal authority to approve or disapprove building and ground usage subject to review by the Board of Education. The Town Basketball Team has been given permission to use the gym Monday nights until March.

Bryan Higgins and Etta Hurd were approved as substitute bus drivers pending Superintendent Miller's approval and successful completion of physical and chauffeur exams.

The Board approved the payment of the New York State School Board's Association dues.

Cornell Ag. Engineers Advise Farmers To Rid Snow Drifts From Roof

Cornell University Agricultural engineers warn that another big snow storm will pose a serious threat to all types of structures, particularly farm buildings.

At least a dozen buildings including poultry houses, dairy barns, garages, sheds of all types and even commercial buildings collapsed under the weight of heavy snow accumulation on rooftops.

Hard hit are the areas south of Albany in the Hudson Valley and many parts of the Southeastern section of the state.

A combination of a heavy load of snow and wind-whipped snow drifts on one side of a roof often exceeds the design limit of the structure, according to Prof. Hollis R. Davis, agricultural engineer, N. Y. State College of Agriculture, Cornell.

Urging immediate removal of snow from roofs, the engineer advises homeowners and farmers to take a close look at the snow piles and get rid of them before another storm hits.

Snow accumulations that exceed two feet on the roof in some cases, caused buildings to collapse, Davis said.

Prof. Wilmot W. Irish, a specialist in dairy barn construction suggests where snow removal is impossible, that the structure be reinforced with temporary supports inside the building.

Compounding the situation are ice dams along the eaves, causing snow drifts to collect and pile up, thus creating structural imbalance, he explained.

Prof. John W. Layer, who specializes in crop storage facilities, agrees with his colleagues in pointing out that the recent snowfall and strong winds have created a situation where many farm structures may not be able to take any more snow.

After a period of time, many buildings develop structural fatigue, reaching a point where an extra load of snow could crush them, he said.

Some of the buildings that went down were relatively new, structures, and roof cave-ins or outright collapse may be much more extensive than actual figures now available.

Public Ready To Pay For Conservation

It seems that New Yorkers, as well as people all across the country, are ready to clean up the outdoors and make the environment a little better place to live.

Who knows what brought about the change of heart? Was it the rampant over-use of DDT and other hard pesticides, the growing threat of thermal pollution from nuclear power stations, the big dam builders and river changers, the open sewers we call streams, or the fact that 10 to 20 deaths a day frequently occur in New York City due to badly polluted air? Maybe it was a combination of all of these that sounded the alarm, and brought today's maze of environmental problems into focus.

In any event, 97 per cent of the American public favors reallocating Federal spending to provide more money for improvement of the natural environment, according to a national public opinion poll conducted for the National Wildlife Federation, which is supported by the New York State Conservation Council.

Although segments of the public differed on areas where they would reduce spending to free money for conservation, the major targets were national defense, the space program, and international affairs.

When supplied with information on current Federal spending the under-30 generation particuarly favored taking money from defense and international affairs budget. A full 71 per cent of the college educated favored reducing the defense budget.

The pollsters concluded, "the American people in 1969 appear to desire the focus to be on the solving of domestic problems and the improvement of the actuality of life at home. The high concern of younger adults and late adolescents may well indicate an important shift in the general population's priorities."

Earlier last year, the National Wildlife Federation sponsored a national poll which found more than 85 per cent of the public concerned about the state of the environment. So concerned, that three out of four said they would willingly pay increased taxes earmarked for conservation, including 63 per cent of those with family incomes under $5,000 per year.

Ironically, in spite of the obvious, overwhelming public desire for solving the country's environmental problems, the Federation's recently completed Index of Environmental Quality found the U. S. is still losing the battle against pollution and natural resources depletion.

Apparently it's another case of the people not getting through to their Representatives and Senators in Washington.

Dairy Outlook For 1970

Allegany County dairymen can look to 1970 as another good year. More uncertainties than usual, however, appear on the horizon in the year ahead according to Cornell economists and the local agricultural extension agent.

Prof. George J. Conneman, and Robert R. Story Agricultural Economists at Cornell University and Agent, Hughes N. Evans, predict that farm milk prices will be up some during the new year but less than this year.

They hastened to add that farm costs may rise at a slower rate.

Referring to the uncertainties they related that national decisions affecting the Federal Milk Order and Dairy Price Support Program will affect the local milk prices and income during 1970.

The professors and agent foresee an increase of five cents a hundred in the blend price of milk bringing the New York-New Jersey price to 5.72. The farm price of milk increased in 1969 for the sixth successive year, they said.

Cow numbers are tending to level out in New York State. Milk production per cow gained in 1969 some 225 pounds and is expected to continue an upward trend, according to Story and Conneman.

They noted a record level of 10,045 pounds of milk per cow in 1969; favorable pasture conditions during the summer and early fall months helped to push production upward.

They said the number of dairymen in 1969 continued to decline but at a slower rate. More than two-thirds of the dairymen have already switched to bulk handling of milk and the swing is expected to continue.

The economists and agent pointed out that the sales of whole milk have declined in the three New York markets — N.Y.C. area, Rochester, and Buffalo. Skim milk and low fat milk sales have increased. And these trends are expected to continue into 1970, they concluded.
