LIVING UNDER LAW

TAKING A TRIP?

"Gee, officer, I'm sorry. I forgot to get the license renewed this year."

"That's unfortunate, sir. I'm afraid I'll have to cite you for driving with an expired license."

The foregoing might be titled "How to Spoil a trip." NOW is the time to check into the "Legal" aspects of a trip.

An expired operator's license is only one headache you can avoid by checking your license before starting the trip.

Whether you plan a short trip in New York or a tour of the country, there are several guidelines you should follow:

1. Check tour route and the traffic regulations which control it. If you are towing a trailer for instance, you may be prohibited from using some bridges and tunnels, depending on the type of trailer.

2. Make certain that anyone who is planning to drive your automobile is familiar with its operation, and has a valid operator's license. If traveling out-of-state you should check the minimum age for drivers.

3. Have your car or camper checked and serviced by a qualified mechanic and put into A-1 condition. A number of states have spot check inspections for vehicles—a bald tire could stop your trip in many ways. A safety check of your own is just good sense.

4. If you plan to be away from home for an extended period of time, make certain a friend knows where you will be in the event of an emergency. Put your important papers in a secure place and make certain that your family and your attorney know where they are.
