To Thwart A Thief

Gun thefts are on the rise, according to John Madson of Winchester - Western. Many of the victims are gun dealers and collectors, but most are sportsmen. And there's not much the honest, run-of-the-field hunter and shooter can do about it except insure, take certain precautions, and trust to luck.

Your guns may be fully covered in your home policy under "household contents" — but don't count on it. Check with your agent to be sure. You may even want to insure them under a special rider. In any case, be sure that an exact valuation is placed on each gun, by serial number, and that you have a full list of the serial numbers of your guns on file.

What can be done to keep guns from being stolen? Little enough, says Madson, but these steps may help:

While on a hunting trip, even for the day, never leave guns of gun cases in a car where they can be seen. If you stay in a motel, always take your guns in with you at night, a thief can spot a hunter's car a mile away, and knows it's a treasure trove of guns, cameras, and binoculars. The situation has gotten to the place that some city hunters will not even put sportsmen's club decals on their car windows.

If you have a gun cabinet at home, place it where it can't be seen from the outside. Better yet, keep your guns hidden. Madson knows one hunter who keeps a full gun cabinet stocked with "loaner" guns as a decoy for burglars, and his good guns are stashed elsewhere. A New York State trapshooter, who lives on a farm, takes his best guns with him when he leaves home for the day.

Don't keep guns where they can be seen by casual visitors in your home, and never display them to strangers. It doesn't pay to advertise. Three of Madson's friends have lost their guns recently, and in each case it was public knowledge that they owned expensive firearms. One is a well-known outdoor writer and editor who works at home, another displayed his guns on the wall of his family room, and the third was a businessman who received publicity as a big-game hunter.

"In fact," says Madson, "some of the increase in gun thefts may be a reflection of all the publicity that guns and gun ownership have gotten recently. As restrictive gun laws increase and tighten, we can expect a corresponding increase in the underworld traffic of hot guns."
