TROPHY PIKE IN QUEBEC

I cast the red and white spoon along a fringe of speckled alder overhanging the shore, and almost immediately my line began moving across the current. Another Rupert River pike had steel-trapped his toothy jaws around the spoon, and I was set for a 10-minute, water-sloshing battle.

We were fishing deep in Quebec's Mistassini Park, and on any given cast you might hook a brook trout, lake trout, pike, or walleye — but in the shallows of a Rupert River tributary we were in pike territory. They were in a mood to hit anything that moved, and we caught pike up to 12 pounds on spinners, plugs, and spoons. But the old red and white spoons were the best producers.

After dashing across the small river, around the boat, and back to his lair, Harry Payne and Ted Kechaneff stopped casting to watch the fun. Our Cree Indian guide, David Coon, held the large wooden boat steady in the current. Moving to the surface, the large pike began to throw water around. The quiet, remote stream erupted with more excitement than it had seen for awhile. Twice more around the boat, once almost snagging our 18-horse motor, and some reel-screaming runs away from the net, the pike was ready to call it quits.

In two days we'd become accustomed to this kind of fishing, and as David netted a pike as long as my leg my two companions resumed their casting.

Don't get the idea that fish were jumping in our boat. Our party of nine fished hard during the four and one-half days we stayed at the Louis-Jolliet camp. Brook trout were uncooperative, and we did not land any of the large trophies that have made this area of Quebec famous. We did fairly well on lake trout and in late June found them over rock shoals and near islands in about 15 feet of water. Walleyes were fairly easy to find, and we caught plenty for delicious shore dinners prepared by the guides.

But the real action was provided by lunker pike. Most of the anglers who go to Louis-Jolliet seek brook trout—those speckled prizes that grow large in Mistassini Lake and then feed in the Rupert River as it flows westward toward James Bay. Meanwhile, pike seem to have been neglected, and within a few miles by boat from camp you can cast shallow rapids and bays for near virgin fishing.

Louis-Jolliet was improved and enlarged four years ago, and the accommodations are tops. Fishermen enjoy heated tent cabins, complete meals served in a dining room, inside plumbing and hot showers. The cost of $50 per day includes guides, motors, gasoline, and all incidentals. Our party drove to the end of the road at Lake Albanel, and there booked a 20-minute flight by seaplane into Louis-Jolliet. Flights also may be arranged from Chibougamau.

Reservations for Louis-Jolliet may be made by writing Quebec Parks, 748 Marcotte, Rouvral, P. Q., or calling (418) 275-1702.

in New York State" lists each of the 364 hospitals certified to operate in the State and identifies their county, sponsorship classification and number of certified beds.

"Nursing Homes Certified to Operate in New York State" lists each of the 639 certified nursing homes in New York State and their county sponsorship, and number of certified beds.

"Related Health Facilities Certified to Operate in New York State" contains listings for four different types of facilities: health related facilities, independent out-of-hospital health facilities, narcotic addiction rehabilitation centers, and schools for the mentally retarded. The sponsorship and number of certified beds are recorded for each of the 319 facilities.

Dr. Ingraham said that the directories were compiled by computers, which will be used in future studies designed to help health officials provide improved and faster service to the public.
