More Than Ants Can Mar Your Picnic

"More than ants can mar your picnic — food poisoning, stinging insects, and poison ivy can also spoil your fun," Dr. Hollis S. Ingraham, State health commissioner, states.

The warm summer temperatures that lend themselves so well to outdoor eating also promote the growth of bacteria in foods packed for a picnic. The key to avoiding food poisoning is to keep hot foods hot (above 140 degrees F.) and cold foods cold (below 40 degrees F.). This keeps food out of the 40 degree - 140 degree F. temperature range in which bacteria grow fastest," Dr. Ingraham said.

Dr. Ingraham suggested several tips for preparing outdoor meals:

— Wash hands before preparing and serving food. Wash fruit and vegetables thoroughly before eating.

— Don't run the risk of spreading contamination from one food to another. Use a clean utensil to prepare each dish.

— Cooked food that is to be refrigerated should be chilled as quickly as possible, without waiting for it to cool down. Immediate refrigeration helps to keep the food out of the dangerous 40 - 140 degree F. zone.

— Meats, poultry, stuffing, gravy, salads, eggs, custards, and cream pies deserve extra careful attention since bacteria grow quickest in these foods.

— Unsafe food may appear to be harmless; it may give no warnings such as peculiar odor, mold, or unpleasant taste. If you have any doubt whether a food is safe, throw it out.

"Bee stings too, can cause an especially serious problem for those who are sensitive to insect stings," Dr. Ingraham said. He offered these suggestions:

— Darker colors and floral odors are attractive to bees, as are sweet and sticky foods. Avoid these if you can.

— If stung by a bee, wasp, or hornet, run cold water over the sting or pack ice around it to relieve pain and to reduce swelling. Attempting to remove the stinger with your fingers will only squeeze out more venom; use the edge of a knife to scrape out the stinger.

— If the insect sting symptoms become severe, take the person to a physician as soon as possible.

— Persons who know they are sensitive to insect stings should consult their doctors for emergency first aid medication to carry on outings.

Poison ivy usually strikes through direct, unknowing, contact with the plant, but it is possible to be poisoned merely by touching an object which has been in contact with poison ivy, Dr. Ingraham said.

He noted that it is helpful to:

— Learn to recognize poison ivy. Its leaves are clustered in threes and are glossy green in summer.

— Wash and rinse well the affected area (repeating several times) with warm water and laundry soap at the first characteristic ivy poisoning symptoms of itching, rashes, burning and blistering. Symptoms usually develop a few hours to a couple of days after initial contact. If blistering or other symptoms occur, consult a physician.
