90 Cadettes from the Southern Tier Girl Scout Council met recently at Camp Anawya, our 324 acre campsite in Belfast, N. Y., for the first Council - sponsored Cadette Roundup.

Blue, red and yellow tents dotted the apple orchard where the Scouts developed their primitive skills of lashing, fire building and campfire cooking. The scouts enjoyed an evening program of games and campfire singing.

On Saturday Mr. George Brown from the Soil Conservation Department, led groups on two hour nature hikes. Following creek beds and old logging roads the Scouts received an intensive orientation in tree conservation. During the evening campfire the Scouts learned of the wider opportunities offered by the National organization for the summer of 1971. Leading these discussions were Senior Scouts Mary Ann Dougherty, Corning, who attended an Early American Heritage event in Boston, Mass., last summer and Katherine Smith, Canisteo, who attended a nature workshop at the University of Massachusetts last July.

On Sunday the Scouts participated in a "Scouts' Own" on the campsite or attended churches in Belfast. Following a chicken barbecue the Scouts broke camp in the early afternoon. Director for this event was Mrs. James Kane, Canisteo.

She also spoke of the forum held in Alfred, making it known the needs of elderly and preparation for the 1971 White House Conference on Aging.

Roy Warmee of Wellsville told of the importance of the I.D. Cards and the number of merchants in this area that recognize the percent taken from purchase prices in their stores.

The meeting closed with musical selections presented by Allison Baker, Oliver Baker, Frank Tracy and Lou Wallace.

N. Y. S. Dept. of Health News

Chlorination of all public water supply systems in New York State which use ground water as their source has been mandated by the State Public Health Council. Dr. Hollis S. Ingraham, State health commissioner, has announced Deadline for compliance will be January 1, 1973.

Dr. Ingraham characterized the Public Health Council action as "another step in our continuing surveillance-monitoring of public water supply to assure consumers of safe, wholesome drinking water. "We feel," Dr. Ingraham said,

"that this step will raise the level of public health protection equally for all water supplies in New York State."

The chlorination treatment, designed to assure the purity of water obtained from springs or wells, is required under an amendment to the State Sanitary Code.

The amendment, adopted unanimously by the Public Health Council at its August meeting, is an extension of the code requirement which mandates chlorination of systems which use surface water.

(Surface water, under the regulation, is water obtainable from lakes, ponds, rivers, and streams. A "public" system is one which serves five or more homes, schools, institutions, or commercial establishments.)

Dr. Ingraham said the Department's Bureau of Public Water Supply maintains surveillance of the 1,071 public water supply systems now in existence in the State. Of the total, 647 are supplied from ground water sources, and 200 of those already have chlorination treatment. The remaining 427 systems serve a total population estimated at 578,500. Almost all of these systems serve communities of less than 5,000 residents.

Dr. Ingraham said that the Department's water engineering specialists estimate the initial capital cost of installing a chlorination system in a community of 8,000 or fewer residents is slightly less than $2 per person, with annual operating cost after installation averaging about 25 cents per capita.
