BASS ANGLERS TO THE RESCUE

About a month ago, Federal Water Quality Administration investigators reported that the largest industries polluting Lake Erie are falling behind in their clean-up plans, according to the National Wildlife Federation.

"Forty-four of our largest industries have failed to redeem their earlier pledges to clean up pollution of Lake Erie according to schedule," said the report. "Of these, 38 are reported to be more than a year behind, with one Mobil Oil, 32 months behind at its Buffalo, New York plant."

Against this backdrop of defeat and inaction, it is interesting to note what a sportsmen's group is doing to force the U. S. Justice Department to enforce a law that has been on the books since 1899. The Bass Anglers Sportsman Society of America, Inc. (BASS) has filed affidavits in three Alabama federal districts charging 214 manufacturers, municipalities and business with violations of the Federal Refuse Act which prohibits pollution of navigable waterways without Corps of Engineers permits.

According to BASS, the Corps hasn't issued any permits. In the state of Alabama to permit dumping of "refuse" into navigable waters.

Under the Act, "refuse" is broadly interpreted to mean "all foreign substances and pollutants" other than liquid municipal sewage. It provides that private citizens can receive a bounty of up to one half the maximum fine of $2,500 for each incident or day of violation.

BASS President Ray Scott said any rewards for "bagging polluters" will be used for "further action in stopping pollution."

Once again citizen sportsmen, guardians of the environment long before it became fashionable, have had to assume the enforcement responsibilities of local, state, and Federal officials. And the U. S. Justice Department is still dragging its feet.

The Act specifically requires U. S. Attorneys to "vigorously prosecute" offenders, but a recent exchange of letters between Congressman Henry S. Reuss, Chairman of the House Conservation and Natural Resources Subcommittee and Assistant Attorney General Shiro Kashiwa makes it clear the Federal Government isn't about to "vigorously prosecute" anyone for violating the Federal Refuse Act, except, perhaps in a few blatant mercury cases.

In a letter last spring, Kashiwa said, "it would not be in the genuine interest of the Government to bring action under the Refuse Act to secure a criminal sanction against a company which admittedly is discharging refuse into the navigable water of the United States, but which, pursuant to a program being conducted by the Federal Water Quality Administration, is spending significant amounts of money to secure the abatement of that pollution."

The Federal Water Quality Administration is the one that says Lake Erie polluters are not meeting their clean-up commitments. And the merry-go-round goes on as we choke in our own refuse. If mankind is to survive this mess, it will be the Bass Anglers and other concerned citizens who do the job.

CHEESE IS A HAPPY FOOD

It's hard to find someone who doesn't like cheese.

There are so many varieties. Enough, they say, for every taste and every pocketbook.

Certainly, cheese is a year-round food. And yet, it's seasonal, too, in my book. Every year as the tang of fall approaches my taste for cheese steps up, renewed and excited.

Cheese History

Cheese has been a popular food for thousands of years - going far back into history even before the time of Homer. It was served at Caesar's banquet tables and served to his armies as part of their rations just as cheese serves armies around the world at the present time.

Legend has it that cheese was "discovered" several thousand years before Christ by an Arabian traveler who, starting on a journey, placed milk in a pouch made of a sheep's stomach. During the day's journey, the combined action of the sun's heat and enzymes in the lining of the pouch changed the milk into cheese curds and whey. Whey is the thin liquid that drains off when the rest of the milk turns to cheese.

Since that time, many varieties of cheese have been produced, ranging from soft to hard in texture, and mild to pungent in flavor. As cheeses were developed in various world localities (often Trappist Monks), they usually became known by the name of the area as, for example, Cheddar, Stilton, and Roquefort.

This time of year especially, one relishes the thought of cheese in dips, in hot delicacies such as cheese fondue on cheese trays, and as a meat substitute. Ounce for ounce, cheese will give you high quality protein the same as meat, poultry, or fish. Or three ounces of cheese will give you the same amount of protein as three eggs, one and one-fourth cups of baked beans, or one rounded tablespoon of peanut butter.

Then there's cheese in sandwiches, or with macaroni, or as a sauce with vegetables, or as a flavor booster with meat. It could go on and on.

Calcium Equivalents

On a calcium basis, one slice of American cheese (1 oz.) equals three fourths glass of milk. One half cup of creamed cottage cheese contains the same amount of calcium as one-third glass of milk. And two tablespoons of cream cheese offers the calcium of one tablespoon of milk.

Cheese, like other vitamins A, thiamine, riboflavin, and niacin equivalents. So cheese makes significant contributions to our diet just as milk.

In cooking, all cheese dishes should be kept at a low temperature and cooked in a short amount of time.
