Don't Forget The All-County Concert

This Saturday, thirteen high school students and sixth graders will represent Andover in an All-County Music Concert.

This organization, like sports gives each student involved a chance to meet new and different people. It provides a learning atmosphere where each of us can listen to the style and techniques of other musicians our own age. Each member of the Band and Chorus works long hours rehearsing to present the final concert.

What we need is some support. Just like sports we need spectators. Not only do we need the support of our parents but of our friends and neighbors.

The proceeds from the concert are used as scholarships for two talented music students.

This is a very worthwhile organization. Why not spend this Saturday night at an enjoyable concert at the Bolivar Central School. Curtain time 8:00 P. M. See you there!

Panther Prowl

The Andover Varsity Basketball Team certainly wound up their season in a way they can be proud of and remember for many years by playing their final game of the season at the War Memorial in Rochester.

In the preceding game, they played Bradford at Bath, and won with a score of 54 - 51. This sent them on to Rochester, where they met defeat against Honeoye. They had a disadvantage in height, but played a good ball game to wind up their season with a 14 and 6 record.

We're really proud of the job our boys did this year and they should be too. And last, but not least - Congratulations to Coach Hewes!

CONSERVATION COMMENTS

By Paul M. Kelsey

SPORTSMEN'S CLUBS

I got a letter that shook me up for a moment the other day. A woman asked what percent of the sportsmen's clubs in New York, if any, would accept women as members. She obviously had the feeling that they were "men-only" clubs, for she went on asking, "If not, why not?" She concluded by asking, "Since when is fishing and hunting for men only?"

During the 25 years that I have had contact with sportsmen's groups in Central New York, I have never been aware of any that would not take women as members just as quickly as they would men. On a number of occasions I have seen women playing an active part as club officers. The questions looked like those of a women's liber who was looking for new fields to conquer. That is all right with me. What bothers is that if sportsmen's clubs look like men-only social clubs, they aren't doing the grassroots type of conservation work that they should be doing.

Years ago hunting and fishing was primarily a man's activity, and the understanding of how wildlife depended on other elements of the natural scheme of things was not understood. Wildlife management was a simple task such as stocking predator control and protective legislation. The club's actions to improve their sport were very limited, but obligingly tangible. Beyond that it was social - cards, skeet, etc.

The cards and skeet are still there, but the programs to enhance their hunting and fishing has grown beyond the limits of stocking and predator control. Most sportsmen now recognize the need for good habitat as basic to any usable wildlife population. Use of heavy equipment in construction and the resulting pollution from development has eliminated so much formerly good hunting and fishing territory before their very eyes that they are now trying to get at the root of the trouble.

What are progressive clubs doing to help protect or restore wildlife values of the environment?

There still are some clubs that will get out and get their hands dirty and do such things as plant trees and shrubs, construct stream improvement structures, and plant willow along streambanks.

Youth education is also an important item in most club programs. For years they have been behind the Conservation Camp program of the Department, helped with firearms safety, supported sixth grade conservation field days, and many other programs.

Much more emphasis is placed on developing and pressing for good environmental legislation. Here, clubs work together, with watchdogs looking over the shoulders of our legislators in Albany, and keeping the clubs back home informed through their State affiliation with such organizations as the New York State Conservation Council and the Izzac Walton League of America. At the grassroots level the sportsmen then are in a position to advise their local assemblymen and senators how organized sportsmen feel about proposed legislation, and why.

At this point, there are many other organizations that have traditionally been on the opposite side of the fence from the rod and gun clubs, such as local bird, nature study and garden clubs, who are also doing everything within their power to protect the environment. Though they may have differing views on the ultimate use of the resource, if the resource is lost for lack of broad general support nobody wins. It is time that more effort was directed toward this type of cooperation.

One example of the type of place that they can all meet on common ground is in the local Environmental Advisory Councils. These groups are inventorying the open spaces, unique areas and other elements of the county resources with an eye to seeing that they won't be swept away with future development. They are responsible directly to the local legislative body, and work closely with their planning committee. What better place is there to get in on the local action? If the council or board isn't doing its job, sportsmen's clubs have pressure to see that they do.

Veterans News

Many veterans are finding that their GI insurance policies are lapsing and are wondering why, according to Mr. James J. McLaughlin, State Veteran Counselor. It is because, he explained many of these veterans are caught up in the habit of riding the thirty-one day grace period.

Too many of them, forget to mail in their premiums before the final deadline, then they are surprised to find their policies have lapsed. This generally occurs, he said, just when their dependents need the protection the most.

The counselor urged veterans with GI insurance policies to rid themselves of the habit of riding the grace period and bring their premiums up to date to avoid losing this financial protection for their families.

The counselor also reminded them to be sure to include their current mailing address and insurance policy number with all correspondence about their insurance. This, he noted, will insure prompt and proper attention to their inquiries.

Counseling and information on GI insurance and other veterans benefits is available at the local counseling center of the New York State Division of Veterans Affairs located at the Municipal Bldg., Wellsville, N. Y., on Tuesdays, and at the City Bldg., 108 Broadway, Hornell, N. Y., on Mondays, Wednesdays, Thursdays and Fridays.
