June. Taking note of gardeners' complaints about these problems, Prof. Ray Sheldrake, vegetable crops specialist at the N. Y. State College of Agriculture and Life Sciences, Cornell University, says it's probably too late to do anything about the radishes.

However, there's time to sow them again, he says. This time, he advises, either dust or sprinkle an approved insecticide over the row soon after seeding. This will kill the white maggot that infects radishes as they hatch.

This maggot also attacks cabbage, cauliflower, broccoli and others in the cabbage family soon after the plants are set out. However, it is less threat to late maturing varieties.

Sheldrake says an insecticide called Diazinon is effective, either used around the stem of each plant or sprinkled over the seeded row at the time of seeding. The Diazinon should be used as recommended on the label of the container.

Holes that appear on tomato plants, eggplant, and radish leaves probably are caused by flea beetles, Sheldrake says.

The best answer to this problem is to use an insecticide known as Sevin. Again Sheldrake cautions that it should be used as recommended on the container. This chemical is also effective against many other insects both in vegetable and flower gardens.
