CONSERVATION COMMENTS

HUNTER TRAINING

With the small game and water-fowl seasons opening on October first throughout most of upstate New York, hunters will be rushing in to renew their hunting licenses during the next several weeks.

To keep the ranks of hunters filed this year, some 90,000 aspiring hunters must successfully complete the required hunter safety course before they can qualify for their first license.

If you are one of these new hunters don't put off taking the training until the last moment. Instructors of these courses are all volunteers who are also ardent hunters so it is quite understandable that they plan to schedule their instruction prior to the hunting season.

These 4,200 instructors work closely with the Department of Environmental Conservation to help insure that a uniform program is being given but they are strictly on their own when it comes to scheduling classes. In most cases, it is an activity of a local sportsmen's club, so if you do not see announcements of hunter training classes in the local newspaper, contact your nearest sportsmen's club. The local environmental conservation officer has no official activity in these courses but through contact with the organizations, most know of classes. He certainly can give you the names and addresses of key sportsmen in the community who could answer your inquiry.

When the hunter training program started in 1949, it applied only to those who were age 17 or younger. The marked reduction in hunting accidents that occurred following the inauguration of the course prompted many other states to develop similar ones. New York has now expanded its program to apply to everyone who wants to get his first hunting license.

When the program first started, it was strictly a hunter safety program. Many instructors were distressed at the steady increase in the amount of posting of private land caused by hunters who did not have the traditional hunting ethic of respect for the landowner, the land, other hunters and the game itself. They began incorporating some of this into our program and it spread until it is now a vital part of the course. Safety is in no way downgraded but it stressed that the hunter without a good hunting ethics is the hunter who is causing the posting which could mean an end of the hunting in much of the more populated areas of the northeast.

Many people are not aware that the Penal Law sets forth the basic regulation governing the use of firearms by those under 16 years. With two exceptions, it clearly states that it is unlawful for anyone to sell or give any firearm, air or spring gun or ammunition thereof to any person under 16 years of age.

The Penal Law permits 12-to 16-year olds to receive instruction from duly qualified adults on a regular rifle range using rifles no larger than .22 calibre rim fire.

Lee Ryan Reports From Allegany County Legislature

As Allegany County Legislator for District Five, I was very pleased recently when asked to provide news of county government. For the benefit of new residents, the County Legislature is comprised of 29 townships which are divided into five districts. In the fall of 1969, I was elected to represent you people in District 5, which includes the townships of Alfred, Almond, Andover, Amity, Waro, West Almond, and Burns.

As my first term nears completion, I would like to share with you a few things I have been involved in. I would like to tell you today about one of the major issues for which I pushed very hard - the County take over of the Town's share of cost in the building of town bridges. This Donovan bill took the place of the old Erwin road program, and is of great benefit financially to the towns.

Allegany County, prior to 1971, had a town bridge building program in which the County built, and paid for an average of eight bridges per year in the 29 towns. With the coming of the Donovan Bill (by the State) in 1971, there was no provision for the County to participate in the cost.

The Donovan Bill, simply put, states that each participating town which builds roads and bridges to the State specifications will be aided from 25 to 75 per cent of the total project cost, not to exceed $36,000. To determine the percentage of aid to each town, several factors are used: valuation of real property and town road miles outside villages.

As a very interested legislator in the costs to towns of their bridge programs, I introduced a resolution in early 1971 urging the County takeover of the Town's bridge building program. With the final approval of the Donovan law in that same year, and so as not to lose this state-aid, we (County Legislators) memorialized the State legislature to amend the Donovan bill to make it possible for the County to pick up the Town's share of the cost for bridges, which the state passed this year.

Within the next month, there will be a resolution coming out of the highway committee taking advantage of this legislation. Allegany County towns, with over three hundred bridges (300), will be a big benefactor of this legislation - which did not come easy. Several meetings and resolutions with our inter-county body made up of seventeen neighboring counties, trips to Albany to communicate with our State legislators, as well as numerous meetings on the County level.

Another subject of interest is the Health Services Committee, which I feel is probably one of the most important sub-committees. This committee encompasses nursing, the physically-handicapped children's program and sanitary inspection.

As a member of this committee, I just recently helped to update the constitution and by-laws.

The nursing service which has as its director Mrs. Margaret Connelly, is located at the old County Infirmary outside Angelica on County route No. 2. At the present time, we have 4 1/2 public health nurses (one being part-time), 5 regular registered nurses, plus a temporary and a part-time physical therapist, also a speech therapist hired on a contract basis. The service also contracts with the Allegany County homemaker services for 11 home health aides.

It is their job to provide skilled nursing, rehabilitative and personal care to acute and chronically ill patients at home, also public health nurses working with physicians and nurses maintain a discharge planning service at the County's two hospitals for patient and their families to provide for the continuity of care at their home once they are discharged from the hospital. The public health nursing service also conducts pre-school immunization clinics in Fillmore, Cuba, Belmont and Wellsville, chest clinics in Wellsville and orthopedic clinics in Wellsville and Cuba. Family planning clinics are also conducted in Wellsville and Cuba.

Plans for the future include a well child conference to be conducted in various areas of the county on a regular basis and to be run by nurses and backed up by physicians. A mobile health unit sponsored by the Alfred University School of Nursing, the Lakes Area Regional Medical Program, and Allegany County Nursing Service has been in operation since October 1972. The purpose of this clinic is to provide health education, health assessment, and referrals for follow-up as needed, to the family physician or, with his approval, to other sources.

There are no fees for this service. Dean Virginia Barker, head of Alfred University School of Nursing, and Mrs. Margaret Connelly of our own nursing service are primarily responsible for the Mobile Health Service.

The Allegany County Homemaker Service, Inc., provides services such as meal preparation, shopping, light laundry and housekeeping to families undergoing some special difficulties which make it impossible for them to cope with the usual activities of daily living. The home health aides are under contract by the public health nursing service and generally provide services to people over 65 years of age, although people of all ages are eligible for the service.

Two years ago, Allegany County created the position of County Sanitarian. I think we are indeed fortunate to have Conrad Kruger in this position. Mr. Kruger's job is to check where there are problems with septic tank drainage, advise on new installations and, in general, to control pollution in our county. He also inspects restaurants in regard to food cleanliness and the general sanitary conditions where any food is presented to the public.

together and get to know each other better.
