KEEP THIS IN MIND — If you find you're having difficulty in a particular subject while studying under the GI Bill this fall get yourself a tutor. The VA will pay up to $50 monthly toward the cost to keep you from falling it. See your local State Veteran Counselor for the details.

BETTER SAFE THAN SORRY — Persons receiving VA or other government financial assistance have long been the target for thieves and con men bent on relieving them of their benefit checks. A convenient way for veterans to avoid losing their benefit checks, or having them stolen is to have them mailed directly to their local banks for deposit to their individual accounts. This procedure has proven helpful to persons who travel or have frequent changes of address, making it difficult for them to receive their benefit checks on schedule. With the checks being sent directly to the bank, they are assured of receiving their funds safely and promptly.

Persons in hospitals, or bedridden at home, too, have found it a convenient way to handle their financial affairs while they are confined. To arrange for this service a person must sign an agreement empowering their bank to endorse and deposit the VA benefit checks to their personal accounts. This power of attorney is filed with the bank and the VA advised of the agreement. Arrangements for assigning power of attorney to a local bank can be made through the local counseling center of the New York State Division of Veterans' Affairs located at the Municipal Bldg., Wellsville, N. Y., on Tuesdays, and at the City Bldg. 108 Broadway, Hornell, N. Y., on Mondays, Wednesdays, Thursdays and Fridays.

Card Of Thanks

We wish to express our sincere appreciation for all the acts of kindness and expressions of sympathy extended to us. We wish to thank Dr. Miller, Dr. Tartaglia, nurses and staff at Jones Memorial Hospital, Rev. and Floyd Aldrich and all our wonderful friends and neighbors. God bless you all.

Lee Ryan Reports From Allegany County Legislature

The Health survey showed that we need more thought given to our long-term care people.

For example, the distribution of patients currently in nursing homes could be more ideally placed in some instances at a different level of care. Twelve per cent of those patients in nursing home beds would be more appropriately served at a level requiring less care than they are now receiving. Ninety-five per cent of the inappropriately placed persons would be adequately served at the level of care provided by a health-related facility.

The lack of a health-related facility in the County necessitates the use of about 12 per cent of the available nursing home beds for patients who actually require less expert and less costly levels of care.

Survey findings indicate that roughly 167 Allegany County residents need nursing home care. The persons are presently living at home or in various institutions.

An estimated 208 nursing home beds are needed in Allegany County by 1977. There are 122 existing (I believe this figure is lower now since the survey) conforming nursing home beds available in Allegany County.

In its summary, the survey pointed out that because of its sparse and widely dispersed population, it is hard to provide health services for everyone. This is also made more complicated by the lack of public transportation facilities.

Current medical manpower in the county is inadequate to serve the population by any standard or by comparison with other localities. Because we have a large percentage of our physicians in the older age group, the survey states if there is no substantial influx of new physicians during the next few years it could become far more serious.

It behooves the community and particularly its physicians to create the most attractive circumstances possible for the recruitment of new primary care doctors. The failure of such an effort, combined with the completion of the Southern Tier Expressway may very well result in a situation in which many Allegany residents other than those in the Wellsville area will find it more feasible to use the medical resources of adjacent counties. This certainly would result in more hardship to our less mobile people.

Under long-term care, the summary points out that Allegany County has 86 fewer nursing home beds than projected needs suggests. This certainly shows the need for immediate planning for such facilities to preclude a serious long-term care deficit in the future. As the population of Allegany County ages, the need for long-term care facilities will become more critical.

In conclusion, the survey states that it should not be interpreted as a criticism of what presently exists or does not exist, but as a guide for planning for the improvement of health care service to meet the needs of the citizens of Allegany County. The limited resources of the county cannot be used as a justification for a lack of planning for the future. Rather, in such a situation it becomes even more important to make sure that resources are directed toward the most efficient and effective service designed to meet the needs of highest priority.

YOU ARE WHAT YOU EAT

"You Are What You Eat" is the official slogan for National School Lunch Week again this year. Students, educators and many parents are involved in the nationwide celebration this week.

And this is as it should be, for the school lunch program is highly important to each of these groups. Certainly, a major purpose of our educational system is to produce functioning individuals. And certainly, an important part of functioning effectively as an individual is knowing how and what to eat to be healthy.

An Educational Force

Well, school lunch is a major force for educating students on just that. It is fine to learn about nutrition in the classroom. But to actually experience meals in which food selections are sound as well as tasty — this has to reinforce the classroom message. And that is what school lunch programs are all about.

Even if some kids don't eat it all — and this happens — it is still a tangible demonstration of good nutrition. And school lunch rooms can and do modify menus to try and meet the desires of students. If there is some waste it probably represents a resistance to some foods just as we encounter in the home.

But as a nutrition-minded physician I am concerned about something this year. Since last summer, for the first time, a new Federal law allows Federally-assisted school lunch programs to have more discretion in the foods they serve. The theory is that meals are to be judged on whether the nutrients in them are sound nutritionally, rather than whether they offer specific foods as the sources of these nutrients. That is well and good. Particularly, as it will allow regional and ethnic differences that may be preferred in making the meals interesting.

However, in conjunction with this change, it is now left to the individual states and schools to decide whether, in addition, the vending of certain beverages and snack-type foods should be allowed in schools. The concern of nutritionists is that school boards, for example, may eagerly decide that a good way to make money for, say, band uniforms or some other school interest, is to start selling carbonated beverages through vending machines in the schools. You may be sure they will be encouraged to consider this, via a share of the profits, by beverage companies.

The Important Question

The question is this, is school lunch simply a commercial operation that a school uses to make money for other purposes?

Those of us who for years have encouraged and supported the school lunch program have done so, not just to feed kids, as admirable as that may be, but because of an equal interest that is educational in nature. Parents certainly would not endorse books of less than high educational value being used in the classroom to finance the football team. Well, school lunch is part of the educational curriculum and parents should make their views known to school boards when and if this matter comes up in their community.
