Sesqui Educational Conference Held

Approximately 150 people attend the Sesqui-Centennial Educational Conference held on June 27 at Andover Central School sponsored by the Bally-hoo Belles, Blackboard Beards and the Board of Education.

Mrs. Marco Conde gave an excellent talk on the history of education within the school district, its origin, traditions and bits of historical fact.

Mr. William Farnsworth, Superintendent, Allegheny County, defined the County Redesign Task Force program.

Following Mr. Farnsworth the guests enjoyed a delicious buffet dinner prepared by Joanne Moline.

After dinner Dr. Robert King, the New York State Coordinator for Redesign in Education, Mrs. Ann Lamkins and Frank B. Mesiah were introduced and discussed the State Redesign Program which approaches the school program as a whole unit. He suggested we take a look at what is happening in the educational program and if the State can aid us they are ready and willing to do so. Mrs. Lamkins stressed the need for active cooperation and participation on the part of the citizens of the school district. The audience then broke up into small groups who formulated their own questions about the ideas of redesign answered by Dr. King and Mrs. Lamkins.

The program was very well received by those attending who also enjoyed looking at old books,

Monday morning we started out early for the Buffalo Zoo. The weather wasn't as we had hoped for, but the sixty-eight children that went didn't let that get in their way.

Tuesday proved to be a long day, as about fifty children attended our Annual Tent City. We toasted marshmallows, hot dogs and more or less slept out in tents. Some of us didn't get much sleep but the children seemed to enjoy themselves.

Wednesday we are planning to take a train ride on the Attica Arcade Railroad.

GOING FISHING? — TAKE A BOAT

The best single way to put fishing adds in your favor is to use a boat. Numerous national surveys are on record that show that fishermen using boats catch more fish than those who do not.

A boat is not a key to instant success, however. Whether you are fishing Lake Ontario, an Adirondack Lake, or a farm pond in the Southern Tier you've got to know how to use your boat. Here are some tips I've found useful in using a boat to catch more fish.

Keep your tackle ready. I usually have three rods and reels set up and within arm's reach. One is usually an ultra-light rig with a spinner or ultra-light lure attached. My second rod is used for casting standard size lures or trolling, and the third will be rigged to fish live bait. This way I lose less time changing lures and can try two or three methods at each spot while my companion usually tries one.

Keep seated. This is rule number one for boating safety in small boats, but a study in Wisconsin indicates that musky fishermen catch more fish sitting than standing. Presumably, seated anglers are not so readily spotted by sharp-eyed fish over as great a distance. Anyway, I keep my profile as low as possible.

Move quietly. is still another cardinal rule. Everyone should know that banging the bottom or side of a boat, or rattling a tackle box, is a warning telegraphed to fish all around the boat.

The big fad right now among many fishing experts is to fish "structures". This is just a fancy name for fishing the reefs, shoals, weed beds, flooded stream channels, sunken trees and the like. These are the very same places anglers have been fishing since the hook was invented — and the way to work them over is with a boat. You have got to get out where the fish are living.

It should go without saying, but here it is — trolling is one of the best ways to find fish. Some call this lazy man's fishing, but trolling is an excellent way to cover a lot of water. It will produce fish, and when you've found some you want to anchor and cast to the school. But trolling with an outboard motor has filled up the stringer for me on hundreds of jaunts.

One final idea, keep fishing. The fisherman who keeps his lure in the water is reaching more fish. And, the more you reach the better your odds of catching some.

Summed up, this review course for boat fishermen is as follows: be ready, be quiet, stay hidden, fish those good spots the experts hit, troll to find fish, and keep fishing.
