DON'T BE A SNOW-SHOVELING STATISTIC!

An Editorial

So far this season we haven't had a real snow storm — which means we haven't had to do any snow shoveling.

However, with the arrival of our first real snow-storm and blizzard Monday, we had better adjust ourselves to the fact that our moderate weather may be over — and a real winter still ahead of us.

Already there have been several reports of at least 8 persons in Western New York State that have become fatality statistics resulting from the first large snow storm in the Buffalo area two weeks ago — with most of the victims being reported as Heart Attack casualties from shoveling snow.

Snowfalls of 12 to 20 inches are not unusual in this area — and although we may have a day or two warning of an impending storm from the weatherman — we may also wake up some morning to find the ground blanketed with an unexpected snowfall and still snowing hard.

As you gaze glumly at the falling snow and brood about galoshes, snow shovels, and aching backs, remember that it could be worse! You could be out there shoveling the snow off your sidewalk — or even worse you could be stuck out there with your car some place away from immediate civilization!

The old saying "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure" could very well apply for a warning to all snow shovelers — Before we have a heavy fall of Snow! Thus how about considering the following facts and advice:

Shoveling snow is hard on the Heart. If you're overweight, over 40 and not used to exercise, shoveling snow may snow you under with a heart attack. Every year many men succumb to a heart attack during the winter months as a result of this violent exercise and thus become a "Snow-Shoveling Statistic".

In freezing weather tiny blood vessels beneath the skin give off heat like your car radiator. To insulate your system, these millions of vessels tighten into spasm and detour blood away from your skin.

Now your blood has to be squeezed into a smaller circulation and blood pressure rises. To pump against this pressure, your heart has to pump harder.

You'll probably bundle up before going out into the piercing cold. Heavy sweaters, jackets, boots and overcoat add up to extra pounds — weight that you have to carry around. This means more work for your heart.

Then you start scooping up drifts like a muscle bound stoker shoveling coal into a fiery furnace. Much, much more work for your heart!

Vital coronary arteries nourish your heart muscle. They may already be narrowed, not enough to cause trouble when you rest and sit around, but enough to prevent their delivering all the blood needed when your heart has to strain extra hard.

And so your heart muscle strangles and screams across your chest, your shoulder and down your arm — A Heart Attack!

Guard Your Heart!

If you're not used to anything more strenuous than pushing a pencil, don't shovel snow. Hire some local boys who want to earn extra spending money, or stand behind a self-propelled motorized snow-plow.

Then you won't be snowed under with a snow-shoveling heart attack!
