CONGRATULATIONS, GRADUATES!

This is a happy and glorious day in your life. And rightly so, for it is the termination of many long years of formal scholasticism, classroom experiences and school activities. It is an end of many things and the realization of a dream, come true.

Though an end, this day is also a new commencement — every ending is a start of a new beginning. Today is the start of a new life, full of new opportunities, careers, jobs and friends; replete with new, future joys and sorrows, crosses and crowns.

What career you are choosing for yourself is not really as important as is the fact of what you will do with and through that career and your future life.

Be the best and do your best! Be true to the first lessons, the early, solid principles you have learned at home, in school, in church. Be true to yourself! Be honest with yourself! Be willing to learn in many ways with your head and heart. If you adopt the attitude of vain glory that "you know it all", then you will never really mature and grow up.

Be a leader, not a follower! Be not swayed by various fads, for they're shallow; that's why they come and go so swiftly and change so often. Follow not so-called novel, clever, sophisticated ideas for there is really nothing new under the sun, as you will discover the more you mature.

Be positive and concrete, for negatives and generalities are empty, void-creating nothings of much ado about nothing. Think with your head and heart and live with justice and charity toward all, including your families, for they are much more full of wisdom and knowledge than you sometimes think.

Stay close to God, so the All mighty will know whom to bless on this earth.

Book knowledge, for the most part, has come to an end. But now, your real training and education begin. Now you are entering the school of life in an adult way and the graduate school of hard knocks will teach you more than you ever envisioned possible. In life, thru life and with life you will progress in true wisdom and age before God and man. Your choices and decisions, be they positive or negative, only time will tell, will make this world better or worse, because now you will be a more active part of the world than before. You will make or break yourself and others around you because you are a creation of God, a member of the human family, a child of, rather, an adult of the universe. You wanted to grow up, and so you did; now really grow up and mature before God and men.

Welcome to adulthood, young people! Be a credit to yourself and to all around you. Make this a beautiful world, for life is a beautiful gift to you. Good luck! And God bless!
