"Inside The State Capital"

By James L. Emery
PROGRESS REPORT FROM LAKE PLACID WINTER OLYMPIC SITE

At the invitation of the Lake Placid Olympic Organizing Committee, I was pleased to have been among the group of state legislators and commissioners of various state departments involved in the Olympic effort - Transportation, Environmental Conservation, Taxation and Finance, and others - who were given an on-the-spot report of the progress being made and the accomplishments expected to be reached in the future at the Olympic site.

The construction of the many Olympic facilities appeared to be well ahead of schedule. Some environmental challenges to the speed skating rink and the ski jump towers have been resolved and construction of those facilities are well underway. Conservationists indicated that contractors are doing a very adequate job of maintaining the environmental qualities and features of the area during construction. There seems to be a real sense of cooperation underlying the entire project.

Local, state and federal governments are working together to produce an excellent overall project, and hardly enough can be said about the Olympic Organizing Committee which consists of local business, labor and government officials who are dedicating themselves to this effort, at no cost to anyone, in order to keep things moving smoothly ahead.

One ski jump tower is nearly complete, the cooling system of the speed skating arena is being tested this week, the new ice hockey arena is progressing nicely, and the refurbishing of buildings used during the 1932 Olympic is right on schedule.

I was greatly amazed at the Olympic Village construction located at Ray Brook, New York, 12 to 15 miles outside of Lake Placid. This facility will house the athletes during the Olympic Games and will then be used as a federal youth detention center. It is being built at a cost of 18 to 20 million federal dollars.

Some of the parallel purposes for which many things are being built is very unique. The Ray Brook Village site is a prime example. It will provide the athletes with security during the games and its future use as a security facility will provide jobs for an area which suffers from unemployment ranging from 15 to 28 per cent.

In fact, the entire 1980 Winter Olympic project appears to have a real purpose of improving the future for the Lake Placid area. The people of Lake Placid are trying to develop their area as the permanent training site for the United States Winter Olympic team. After the investment of the $100-million total cost for the 1980 Olympics, of which they hope to recoup nearly every penny, Lake Placid is likely to have this nation's most modern winter training facilities and there's a good chance their goal may be achieved.

The entire Lake Placid area is an example of good community spirit. I wish them every success.
